Gerald Karl Helleiner fonds

Biographical sketch

Gerald Karl Helleiner was born in St. Polen, Austria on October 9, 1936, the third son of Karl Ferdinand Helleiner, the provincial archivist, and his wife, Grethe Deutsch. Gerald's name was registered as "Gerhard", changed in primary school in Canada to "Gerald". After Anschluss in 1938, life became difficult for the family because Grethe was Jewish. Ordered to divorce her, Karl resolved to take his family out of Austria, first by sending his two eldest sons to England early in 1939. Karl left in August, followed by his wife and Gerald in August, on the last plane out of Vienna before the outbreak of war. With the help of Gert Ladner, an Austrian friend at the University of Toronto, and financial assistance from British and Canadian organizations, including the Society for the Protection of Learning at the U of T, the family arrived in Toronto on Christmas Eve, 1939.¹

Gerald attended Brown School on Avenue Road in Toronto and Oakwood Collegiate Institute, graduating from the latter in 1954, where he was valedictorian. He then "drifted onward...to Victoria College ("Vic") at the University of Toronto because university study was expected of me and the cost of studying elsewhere would have been prohibitive."² He entered the four-year programme in Commerce and Finance, a concentrated programme in economics, but found many of the courses boring so switched in second year to political science and economics. He also signed up with the University Naval Training Division, which meant he got to travel to Halifax, the Carribean and Esquimaux for two summers. He gained experience in student governance, first on the Vic student body, then as its representative to the university-wide Students' Administrative Council and, finally, as a member of the External Relations Committee which gave him his first direct exposure to American politics. Before the beginning of fourth year, he married a fellow Vic student, Georgia Stirett.

During Helleiner's summer job at the end of third year in Ottawa, he was encouraged to pursue graduate work in economics and to apply to Yale University. He was accepted there for the fall term in 1958 and spent the better part of seven years in New Haven. A Woodrow Wilson Fellowship made going possible. He became immersed in international economics, macroeconomics, and enjoyed, in particular, Lloyd Reynolds' seminar on "national economic organization". By the fall of 1961 he had successfully defended his doctoral thesis. He was then given an assistant professorship in the newly-established Economic Growth Center which was at the frontier in development economics. Here he received his first exposure to Africa – in 1962-1963 he was seconded to Nigeria as a research associate at the Nigerian Institute of Social and Economic Research at the University of Ibadan where he also lectured in economics. Thus began his long and fruitful association with the application of development economics in Africa. In addition to his teaching duties at Yale, Helleiner gained administrative experience as director of undergraduate studies in economics. There was, however, no prospect for permanent employment there so, when he was offered a tenured associate professorship at the University of Toronto in 1965, he returned to Canada.

Much of the material for this biographical sketch is taken from this memoir (in itself a delightful and informative read), other sources being his curriculum vitae, entries for various Who's Who, newspaper articles about Professor Helleiner and some of the pieces he wrote.

At the U of T, Professor Helleiner began by lecturing to fourth year (honours) students in international economics and graduate students in development. He was in Toronto only a year before leaving for Tanzania where, for the next two years, supported by the Rockefeller Foundation, he was the first director of the Economic Research Bureau, “designed to produce policy-relevant studies in support of the newly independent government,” at University College, Dar es Salaam. His research was on matters of agricultural marketing pricing policies.³ This was the first of a number of academic positions that Professor Helleiner accepted outside the University of Toronto. In 1971-1972 he took a sabbatical leave as a visiting fellow at the newly created Institute for Development Studies at the University of Sussex. This marked the beginning of a long association with the Institute (he returned there for the summer of 1975 and for 1975-1976) that was reflected in his 1998-1999 participation in the international advisory committee that conducted an independent review of development studies in the United Kingdom. In 1979 he was a visiting fellow at Queen Elizabeth House, Oxford.

On his return to Toronto in 1968, Professor Helleiner was appointed director of a new diploma-level training program for East African civil servants. Over the following three years he annually organized the training of half-a-dozen African students, whom he selected in East Africa each year. He did not, however, recommend the continuation of the project because he did not see much benefit accruing to Tanzania.⁴

Back in Toronto, he made a point of not accepting senior administrative posts but sat on a number of committees. For two years (1972-1974) he was director of the PhD program in economics, at a time when it faced serious problems, and he subsequently helped expand the University’s development studies programs through judicious hiring. He was actively involved in the discussions and controversies that led to the eventual breakup (in 1981) of the Department of Political Economy into its components: political science, economics, and commerce. He did not approve of the direction the new department, with its emphasis on economic theory, took: “Instead of imaginatively creating a uniquely diverse alternative programme, Toronto struggled to attract students to a third-rate conventional one.”⁵ Though matters did not improve in the ensuing years, the number of doctoral students in development economics increased steadily during the 1980s, with a consequent increase in Professor Helleiner’s supervisory duties (he supervised about half of those completed in economics in that decade). His students grew to resent the compulsory courses in economic theory and econometrics, the manner in which they were taught, and the belittling of their (the students) interest in development. This resulted in a flurry of internal memos as a review of the core PhD courses began in the fall of 1988, a review that did not stop “the juggernaut of overly emphasized compulsory course in economic theory” but did result in “some useful statements of departmental intention, and probably helped to improve the quality of the offerings in theory....”⁶ Professor Helleiner subsequently withdrew largely from the internal departmental wrangling, partly because, in the 1990s, he “faced enormous commitments outside the University – to the G24, IFRPI, WIDER, the North South Institute, and others.”⁷ He did, however, write the occasional strongly-worded and carefully argued memo when it seemed imperative to do so. He took early retirement in 1998 but maintains an office in the Munk Centre for Global Studies.

A significant amount of Professor Helleiner’s work has occurred outside the confines of his departmental duties at the University of Toronto. From 1969 he was deeply involved “in attempts directly and personally to influence Canadian government policies...sometimes dealing directly with CIDA [Canadian International Development Agency], sometimes making presentations to parliamentary committees, writing to the media, or speaking to and strategizing with NGOs,”⁸ both at local groups and at international meetings. Family reasons dictated that he would not be working in Africa again for extended periods, so he shifted his focus “to developing expertise and making contributions with regard to Northern, and particularly Canadian, policies relating to developing countries...and towards intensified research and advocacy in the sphere of international economics.”⁹ His relationships with senior bureaucrats and government ministers generally were often thorny, that with CIDA being a prime example.

Professor Helleiner’s curriculum vitae list his involvement with over forty professional posts. He had membership in many professional organizations and but accepted administrative positions in only a few. The first, in 1967, was vice-president of the Economic Society of Tanzania. In 1969 he was elected president of the Committee on African Studies in Canada. That year it co-sponsored the Montreal conference of the African Studies Association, a divisive event that led to the creation in 1971 of the Canadian Association of African Studies. Since 1978 he has been a member of the North-South Roundtable of the Society for International Development. From 1986 to 1989 he served as international representative of the Canadian Economics Association. Since 2003 he has chaired International Lawyers and Economists against Poverty (ILEAP).

He has devoted a lot of time to major research institutes, beginning with the North-South Institute, where he was deputy chair (1976-1990) and chair (1990-1992). From 1984 to 1990 he sat on the program advisory committee Overseas Development Council in Washington, DC. At the World Institute for Development Economics Research in Helsinki (WIDER), he was a member of its international advisory committee from 1986 to 1995; this led to a long consultancy contract and three of his major publications. He sat on the board of trustees of the International Food Policy Research Institute from 1988 to 1994 and was chair from 1990 to 1994. He was a member of the board of trustees of the Economic and Social Research Foundation of Tanzania from 1996 to 2001.

In the 1970s and the 1980s Professor Helleiner sat on or chaired numerous groups under the auspices of the Commonwealth Secretariat, including study groups on the Common Fund (1977), Protectionism (1982), the International Financial and Trading System (1983); a team on the rehabilitation of Uganda (1979) and an advisory group on economic recovery for the government of Guyana (1988-1989). He had a long association with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) starting with expert groups on economic co-operation among developing countries (1975) and a new programme of action for less-developed countries (1980). In the 1980s he was a member of several United Nations advisory groups and committees and began an association with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The latter, for example, funded the Tanzania Advisory Group (1981-1982) and a symposium in Nairobi on the IMF and Africa that he chaired (1985). From 1989-1996 he was involved with the Brookings Institution project on the history of the World Bank. From 1991-1999 he was research co-ordinator for the Group of Twenty-four (G24), a developing country caucus in the IMF and the World Bank. From 2003 he has sat on the G24 Research Advisory Committee. In 1992-1993 he was a member of the Economic Policy Advisory Group of the Macroeconomic Research Group (MERG), South Africa. In 1994-1995 and periodically thereafter to 2000, he chaired a Group of Independent Advisers on Development Co-operation Issues between Tanzania and Its Aid Donors and later advised and monitored three consultative group meetings. From 1997 to 2003 he was a member of the executive board of the African Capacity-building Foundation based in Harare, Zimbabwe.

Professor Helleiner's involvement with the research institutes and governmental, quasi-governmental bodies, and non-governmental organizations often included research contracts and consultancies. In addition to the organizations mentioned above, others he worked for (the list is far from complete) included the Royal Danish Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Swedish International Development Authority in East Africa, the International Labour Office, the Institute for Research on Public Policy in Ottawa, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the Brandt Commission, the University of the West Indies, and UNICEF.

Given his level of activism elsewhere, it is not surprising that Professor Helleiner agreed to sit on the editorial boards of academic and professional journals; the number of boards – 20 – is. The first was World Development; he joined in 1973 and is still a member. All have some connection to economics, social studies, development economics, or labour; of these, six focus on development studies. Another six journals focus on Africa, especially East and West Africa. Two are Canadian – International Journal and Canadian Foreign Policy, and one, Bangladesh Development Studies, demonstrates that his interest in development studies extends well beyond Africa.

This series contains a voluminous exchange of letters between Professor Helleiner, his colleagues, students, friends, and other individuals. There are several systems of arrangement based, as closely as possible, on those devised by Professor Helleiner himself. The first system is letters of reference; the second is composed of files with titles ranging from “job invitations” and “random interesting people” to “Africa” and “media contacts/advice”. The third system consists of general (originally labelled “miscellaneous”) chronological correspondence for the 1990s on, filed first by year and name of writer within each year and then, for the years 1995-2002, chronologically only. The fourth system consists of letters filed by name of author, and the fifth by correspondents not included in the fourth category; they are filed by author within each year.

The letters of reference, filed by name of correspondent, include both colleagues and former students. Most of the letters of reference for Professor Helleiner’s graduate students are contained in their files in Series 3. The files (boxes 009-017) containing correspondence filed by author within each year; this system also includes letters that Professor Helleiner filed under, for example, the name of a journal or an organization that does not begin with the same letter of the alphabet as the surname of the correspondent.

Series 3: Employment

Textual, graphic, 1960-2002, 0.72 m.

The records in this series document Professor Helleiner's employment at Yale University and the University of Toronto. Most of the material for the former relates to his being seconded to the Nigerian Institute of Social and Economic Research (NISER) at the University of Ibadan in 1962-1963.

The files for the University of Toronto document his employment record generally, his leave as director of the Economic Research Bureau, University College, Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, (September, 1966 to June, 1968), his sabbatical leave at the Institute of Development Studies at the University of Sussex, and his committee work in the Department of Political Economy (from 1981, Economics). There are also files on planning projects and on the Centre for International Studies and other international programs. There is extensive correspondence with his undergraduate, graduate, and post-graduate students and students from other universities and countries, much of it contained in the individual files on graduate students that he supervised or on whose thesis committee he sat, as an internal or an external examiner. These files contain correspondence, progress and research reports, thesis committee reports, and references. The arrangement is alphabetical by name of student.

Series 5: Professional associations and posts

Textual, publications, 1965-2005, 3.09 m.

The records in this series document Professor Helleiner's association with and involvement in several dozen professional associations and organizations, including consulting contracts with governments and educational bodies. There are also files on many of the journals with which he was associated (he sat on the editorial boards of more than twenty at one time or another, one (World Development) for more than thirty years. Most of the latter contain his comments on papers he was asked to assess. There are also files on some conferences that he attended.

The files contain correspondence, memoranda, notes, minutes of meetings and proceedings of workshops, reports (many written by Helleiner), conference programmes and papers, the occasional interview, and selected newsletters and press clippings. The arrangement is by name of organization or event, filed alphabetically.

The most extensive files are on the following organizations, the binding thread being development economics: African Capacity Building Foundation and the African Economic Research Consortium; with officials and politicians of the Government of Canada and about the Canadian International Development Agency; the Commonwealth Secretariat, the International Development Research Centre (IDRC), and International Lawyers and Economists Against Poverty (ILEAP); the North South Institute, the Overseas Development Council (USA), and the North South Roundtable of the Society for International Development (UK); various activities relating to trade and investment in South Africa (including early opposition to it), and ongoing activities in Tanzania (see below); numerous bodies associated with the United Nations (especially UNICEF and UNCTAD); several universities (Dar es Salaam, Sussex, and the West Indies); the World Bank, and World Development.

The International Development Research Centre (IDRC), founded in Ottawa in 1970, was mandated to support research on the reduction of global poverty and particularly research in (as well as for) developing countries."¹⁰ It was initially headed by David Hopper, with whom Professor Helleiner worked on the creation of the North-South Institute in 1975-1976. He sat on the Board of the IDRC from 1985 to 1991.

ILEAP grew out of concerns Professor Helleiner raised in his Prebisch lecture at UNCTAD in December, 2000 about the lack of lawyers (and economists) "committed...to the specially defence of the rights of the poorest in the global economy's legal system and the building of their capacity of defend themselves."¹¹ His call was taken up by Ron Daniels, dean of Law at the U of T, and others, with initial funding from the IDRC.

Series 5: Professional associations and posts

Professor Helleiner's long association with Tanzania is well documented here, beginning in 1978 with the Government of Tanzania Task Force on Export Incentive Schemes, followed by the Tanzania Advisory Group ("Three Wise Men") in 1981 and ending, between 1994 and 2000, with the Group of Independent Advisors on Development Cooperation Issues Between Tanzania and its Aid Donors (which Helleiner chaired) and the associated Tanzania Advisory Strategy.

Additional correspondence on many of these organizations may be found filed under the names of the individual members in Series 2: Correspondence, an example being Roy Culpepper of the North-South Institute.

Of the more than twenty editorial boards on which Professor Helleiner sat, the most extensive files are for International Organization and World Development. The files together contain primarily specially ng relating to his membership on editorial boards and/or his appraisals of papers presented to the respective journals. Some related correspondence may be found in 'Series 2: Correspondence' under the names of editorial board members.

Professor Helleiner's involvement with the Intergovernmental Group of Twenty-four on International Monetary Affairs (Group of 24 or G-24) is documented in Series 7 and with WIDER (World Institute for Development Economic Research) in Series 6.

In his curriculum vitae [B2010-0005/001(01) and /019(05)], Professor Helleiner provides lists of "Journal editorial boards", "Other professional honours and posts", and "sample selected research contracts and consultancies". Researchers will find these lists very useful in gaining an understanding of the breadth of Professor Helleiner's professional activities, while some indication of the depth of his involvement can be gleaned from his memoirs, Listening and learning [B2010-0005/079(02)].

Series 6: World Institute for Development Economics Research (WIDER)

Textual, publications, 1985-2000, 0.91 m.

In 1984 the director of the World Institute for Development Economics Research (WIDER), newly established by the United Nations University (UNU) and based in Helsinki, invited scholars, of whom Professor Helleiner was one, to organize interesting research projects using WIDER's funds and under its auspices. The following year, Helleiner, along with Lance Taylor and others, began to develop a research programme on international economic issues and helped organize a high level conference to flesh out its direction. The programme that emerged involved papers on 18 developing countries, the summary volume of which appeared in 1988.

By 1990, Professor Helleiner had assembled a number of developing country authors and empirically-oriented trade/development analysts to work out a research project on trade and industrialization policies. It produced two books which he edited and for which he wrote the introductions. The first, on trade and industrialization reconsidered, appeared as Trade policy and industrialization in turbulent times in 1994. Papers presented at the WIDER conferences on 'trade and industrialization' held in Ottawa in September 1991 and on 'Trade and industrialization reconsidered' held in Paris in August the same year formed the basis of this volume. Papers on Nigeria, Pakistan and Zimbabwe were not received in time for inclusion in it. A second, shorter volume, containing only five country studies but built on the work of the first, appeared in 1995 as Manufacturing for export in the developing world: problems and possibilities.

A second WIDER project, on new trade theories and industrialization in the developing countries, was begun in 1988 and published as Trade policy, industrialization and development: new perspectives in 1992.

The third project, on non-traditional exporting from Africa, focussed on the following countries: Burkino Fasso, Côte d'Ivoire, Ghana, Kenya, Mauritius, South Africa, Tanzania, Uganda and Zimbabwe, with comparative studies on Chile and Costa Rica. Professor Helleiner worked closely with the African Economic Research Consortium's (AERC) trade liberalization project and with the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). The project began in July 1996 and ran until late 1999. Papers were presented at a joint UNU/WIDER meeting in Kampala, Uganda, in June 1997 and they were subsequently reworked into chapters for the book, Non-traditional export promotion in Africa: experience and issues, which appeared in 2002. The series ends with a proposed project on the United Nations and the Breton Woods Institutions.

This series contains correspondence, memoranda, notes, minutes of meetings, conference material, drafts of papers, reports and publications. The arrangement is by project.

Series 7: Intergovernmental Group of Twenty-four on International Monetary Affairs (G24)

Textual, 1979-2002, 1.23 m.

“The G24...was founded in 1971 to provide more effective voice for developing countries in the international financial institutions....Early in its development, it established a research programme, funded by the UNDP [United Nations Development Program], administered by UNCTAD [United Nations Commission on Trade and Development], and run by Sidney Dell, as a backup for its efforts.”¹² In the 1980s Dell approached Professor Helleiner to undertake research on behalf of the group. One of the latter’s projects was to plan, synthesize and summarize two of the G24’s research programme’s major projects – “one on the implications of the post-1971 (flexible) exchange rate regime for developing countries, and the other on the longer-term implications of the balance of payments crisis in developing countries which had been created by the severe exogenous shocks of the 1970s.”¹³ In the mid-1980s Professor Helleiner was able to find alternate funding through IDRC [International Development Research Commission] for the G24 research programme when it was about to run out of money. He also did most of the organizational work and editing (he also contributed a paper on African finance and debt) of a memorial volume in honour of Sidney Dell (who died in 1990) that appeared in 1995 as Poverty, prosperity and the world economy.

In 1991 Professor Helleiner agreed to replace Dell as the co-ordinator of the G24 research programme, in spite of being very busy with other projects, which he directed until 1999. He noted that “UNCTAD tended to see this program as a project of their own, and to see me as their employee...[as they] handled all of the G24 research programme’s administration...”¹⁴ Professor Helleiner’s duties included attending all the G24’s deputies’ and ministerial meetings and often its Bureau meetings as well. He also attended International Monetary Fund/World Bank meetings, most often in Washington but once every three years in other cities – Bangkok (1991), Madrid (1994) and Hong Kong (1997).

The research programme’s budget never exceeded $200,000 per year, but Professor Helleiner was able to attract further support from the governments of the Netherlands and Denmark and, later from individual G24 governments as well. Between 1992 and 1999, he commissioned over 80 papers, most of which were “published – in batches – in 11 volumes of a new UNCTAD series created solely for this purpose, entitled International monetary and financial issues for the 1990s. Further unpublished issue papers were done in response to specific requests from developing country Eds.”¹⁵ Unfortunately, most of the time these papers were ignored by the IMF and the World Bank staff which had their own permanent research units. Professor Helleiner believes that research programme’s greatest success was at the 1994 conference in Cartagena which was convened to review, on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the Bretton Woods conference that created the IMF, “the state of the international monetary and financial system from the standpoint of the interests of developing countries.”¹⁶

A subsequent innovation, resulting from a meeting in Antigua, Guatemala in August that year, was a decision to create “a G24 Technical Group to improve the relations between the research programme (and its coordinator), the G9 Executive Directors and the G24.”¹⁷ It met twice a year in G24 national capitals as well as Washington, the site of annual fall meetings. The first meeting in November 1994 was followed by specially ones in Abidjan (February 1995), Islamabad (March 1996), Margarita Island, Venezuela (March 1997), Algiers (March 1998), Colombo (March 1999). Professor Helleiner was responsible for the programmes and missed only the Venezuela meeting. Again, the capacity of the Technical Group’s research papers, even when right on topic, to influence G24 members efforts was limited by international political considerations.

This series contains correspondence, memoranda, notes, minutes of meetings, contracts and related legal documents, drafts of research papers, reports, and press coverage.

For a listing of the contents of this series, see Appendix 5.

Series 8: Referees

Textual, 1963-2004, 0.18 m.

Professor Helleiner was frequently asked to review grant applications submitted to agencies as varied as the Canada Council, the Ford Foundation, and the Swedish Agency for Research Co-operation. He was also often asked to review manuscripts submitted to journals, book publishers, and government agencies. His colleagues also knew that he would provide careful commentary on drafts of articles, chapters of books, and reports they were writing. This series documents these activities, and the files are grouped by the categories mentioned. Additional information may also be found in other series, especially 2, 5, 6, and 7.

The files contain correspondence, grant applications, and drafts of manuscripts.

Series 9: Research projects

Textual, 1962-1991, 0.30 m.

This series documents many of Professor Helleiner's research projects that were done early in his career and, for later projects, mostly outside of his work with WIDER and G24. Most of these led to publications, the details of which may be found in Series 10: Manuscripts and publications. Included are sabbatical leave fellowships. The series begins with grant applications, followed by files on research topics, concluding with Professor Helleiner's 'Middle Powers Research Project' (1981-1987) that was carried out through the Development Studies Program at the University of Toronto, and a 'devaution' project.

The files contain correspondence, grant applications, notes, reports, research data, and related material. The arrangement is largely chronological within each category. The descriptions in quotation marks are Professor Helleiner's.

Series 10: Manuscripts and publications

Textual, publications, 1963-2008, 1.0 m.

Professor Helleiner is the author or editor of 18 books, over 100 refereed articles and contributions to volumes, even more non-refereed publications, many book reviews, and some letters to the editor. This series does not contain a complete record of his output or copies of all of his manuscripts. Some files may contain a comprehensive record of the writing of a particular piece, including correspondence with colleagues (Professor Helleiner habitually ran his drafts by them) and/or publishers, contracts, notes and notebooks, drafts of manuscripts and comments on them, offprints, reviews, and royalty statements. Others may contain only the contract, perhaps a letter or two, or a review, but no manuscripts or offprints.

Some of Professor Helleiner's writing have been translated into other languages, including French, Italian, Japanese, Norwegian, Spanish, and Swedish.

For a listing of the contents of this series, see Appendix 6. The list has been taken from Professor Helleiner's curriculum vitae of June, 2005, reproduced in his memoirs, Listening and Learning. Some titles not listed there have been located and added and there will be additional information about some titles in other series.

For the three WIDER volumes that Professor Helleiner edited and for which he wrote introductions and/or chapters, see Series 6.

Series 11: Addresses
