Series F4-5: Publisher files

Date: 1973 - 1996, predominant 1983 - 1995 (creation)

Scope and content: Series consists of correspondence and other material related to the business of publishing. The files provide the researcher with detailed and comprehensive information about the genesis and publication of most of Nouwen's books, as well as biographical information about Nouwen the writer, the business man, and the man.

The series is arranged alphabetically and divided into nine sub-series based on names of the main publishers of Nouwen's books:

- 1.5.1. Ave Maria Press files
- 1.5.2. Crossroad/Continuum Publishing Group files
- 1.5.3. Darton, Longman and Todd Ltd. files
- 1.5.4. Doubleday files, Harper San Francisco files
- 1.5.5. Lannoo files
- 1.5.6. Orbis Books files
- 1.5.7. Verlag Herder files
- 1.5.8. General publisher files

With the exception of the General files, these files represent the major publishers that Nouwen worked with from 1973 to 1996. Although the files contain material on all books published up to Nouwen's death, since his first book was published in 1969, it can be presumed that some of the correspondence and documents from 1969 to 1972 are missing.

The files may include: business correspondence discussing book ideas, titles of books and other issues, including copies of outgoing letters containing Nouwen's response to all stages of publication; business documents such as draft manuscripts, revised manuscripts with annotations, responses to manuscripts by editors and other readers, draft illustrations and mock booklets for design purposes, galleys, page proofs, royalties and advance statements, original publisher/author agreements and contracts; personal correspondence between Nouwen and his editors. The files also contain outgoing correspondence by Nouwen's various assistants over the years, including Connie Ellis, Kathy Christie, Lydia Banducci, Margaret Sutton, Peter Weiskel, Joseph Sarno, Carol Plantinga, Deborah A. Hawkins and Vincent Masi.

The files relate primarily to book publication, however, they also contain material about the publication of articles and audiocassettes, video, material related to requests from publishers for endorsements, forewords and introductions to the books of other writers, and in some cases, especially in the General Publisher files sub-series, requests for permission to publish parts of Nouwen's work and translation rights to his books. Correspondence can be found from publishers in the Netherlands, the former East Germany, Belgium, England, France, Spain, Poland, Italy, South Africa, India, Hong Kong, and Taiwan.

In all descriptions, working book titles are followed by published titles, if different.

Physical description: 1.41 m of textual records

Note [General]: Photocopying of fading fax sheets and newspapers is needed. The documents are mostly in English with some Dutch, French, Italian, and German. Business contracts within the series are restricted. No publication of this material, in whole or in part, without the permission of the Literary Executrix. No reproduction of this material without permission of the Archivist. More detailed information about each sub-series is available. Please see individual sub-series descriptions.

Subseries F4-5-1: Ave Maria Press files

Date: 1973 - 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of five files which deal with Nouwen's personal and professional dealings with Ave Maria Press, a publishing company located in Notre Dame, Indiana. Much of the correspondence is between Nouwen or his assistants and Eugene S. Geissler, Book Editor or Frank Cunningham, Editor for Ave Maria Press. Specific Nouwen publications mentioned in the files include In Memoriam, With Open Hands, Out of Solitude, Compassion, Love in a Fearful Land, and audio cassettes A Spirituality of Waiting, Aging and Ministry, Marriage and Ministry and Spirituality and the Family.

Physical description: 5.0 cm of textual records

Note [General]: No publication of this material, in whole or in part, without the permission of the Literary Executrix.

Note [General]: The sub-series name was created to reflect the most recent name on the business letterhead.

Subseries F4-5-2: Crossroad/Continuum Publishing Group files

Date: 1988 - 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of seven files which deal with Nouwen's personal and professional dealings with Crossroad/Continuum Publishing Group, a publishing company located in New York, NY. In 1992 The Crossroad Publishing Company became a wholly-owned subsidiary of Herder & Herder and its parent company Verlag Herder of Freiburg, Germany. The Continuum Publishing Group, as of 1992, was a separate independent publishing enterprise.

Much of the correspondence is between Nouwen and his assistants and Robert T. Heller, Associate Publisher or Ulla Schnell, Rights Manager/Executive Vice President for Crossroad/Continuum Publishing Group. Of note is that Heller was Editorial Director of Doubleday until 1988 when he moved to Crossroad/Continuum Publishing Group. Nouwen continued his business and personal association with Heller through this publishing company. Specific Nouwen publications mentioned in the files include In the Name of Jesus, The Living Reminder, The Road to Daybreak, Seven Sorrows of Mary (unpublished?), Beyond the Mirror (also referred to as A Glimpse Behind the Mirror), Show Me the Way, Life of the Beloved, Lifesigns, Here and Now (also referred to as Living in the Presence), Ukrainian Diary, Paths booklets, The Return of the Prodigal Son (also referred to as The Prodigal Son), Reaching Out, Creative Ministry, The Wounded Healer.

Subseries F4-5-9: General publisher files

Date: 1984 - 1995, predominant 1987 - 1991 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of eighty files related to business dealings with publishers that Nouwen dealt with on an occasional basis. These files relate primarily to the publication of articles, requests to reprint passages from previously published books, articles and cassettes, requests for endorsements of books by other authors, and translation rights. In addition to business and personal correspondence, the files may contain business documents such as draft manuscripts of books, articles, endorsements and introductions, book cover mockups, signed contracts, royalty statements and publishers' catalogues. Of special note are the St. Anthony Press files which contain draft copies of the Jesus and Mary book and the homilies "Mary, Mother of the Suffering Jesus" and "Mary, Mother of the Priests", as well as the files "Novalis" which contain drafts of Nouwen's 1992 meditations for Passion Sunday and the First Sunday in Advent.

Series F4-6: Financial files

Date: December 1980 - December 1997, predominant August 1986 - September 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Series consists of Nouwen's financial files dating from 1980 and 1997, predominantly from 1986 -1997. Prior to 1986 Nouwen's personal accountant kept the majority of Nouwen's records and likely discarded them after the mandatory seven years retention period. The records from this time period are therefore minimal and consist primarily of financial overviews, cash books and American bank and retirement accounts and insurance files. After 1986, the records become more detailed and voluminous, including files about Nouwen's income (stipends, donations and royalties), expenses, taxes, insurance, retirement plans, credit cards and bank accounts.

Although the boxes were in no discernable order, they have been arranged in the following six sub-series by taking into account both the function of the records and the Nouwen staff member responsible for the maintenance of the majority of the records in that grouping:

1.6.1. General Files

1.6.2. Ledgers

1.6.3. Personal Accountant Files

1.6.4. Expenses Files

1.6.5. Cheque and Deposit Books

1.6.6. Donations Files

A more detailed description of each sub-series, as well as each sub-series arrangement can be found in the sub-series descriptions.

The files were created and kept by various secretaries and financial secretaries that Nouwen hired to control his complicated and extensive financial accounts. In the mid-1970s Nouwen hired Joe Sarno as his personal accountant. Sarno was responsible for Nouwen's income tax returns, American bank accounts and retirement funds until 1994 when Nouwen decided to consolidate his accounts to Daybreak. Carol Plantinga served as his financial secretary from the mid-1970s to 1986. From 1983-1985 Nouwen's assistant Peter Weiskel also worked with the financial files. At Daybreak, Connie Ellis took on the roles of both administrative assistant and financial secretary. After Ellis' became ill in 1992 Kathy Christie became Nouwen's administrative assistant and Lydia Banducci was hired as his financial secretary. Christie remained with Nouwen until his death in 1996. In 1993 Banducci was replaced by Margaret Sutton. Sutton remained in this position until 1997. In 1994 Nouwen began to consolidate all his financial and accounting information at Daybreak. Completing Nouwen's 1994 tax return was Sarno's last responsibility as his accountant. In 1996 Sutton arranged for all the records created and kept by Sarno to be transferred to Daybreak. Nouwen began transferring his accounting to account manager Alka Vijan at Canada Trust in 1994.

Subseries F4-6-1: General financial files

Date: December 1980 - December 1997, predominant August 1986 - September 1996 (creation)

Date: 1956 - 1970 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of Nouwen's general financial files kept by his staff between 1980 and 1997. Includes material regarding bank accounts, credit cards, expenses, financial statements, frequent flyer programs, income from donations, honorariums, royalties and stipend, income tax, car, health and travel insurance and RRSP/retirement funds.

Includes applications, correspondence, forms, informational pamphlets and booklets, invoices, newsletters, receipts, reports, and statements. Photographs accompany some correspondence (none of which are of Nouwen).

The files have been grouped chronologically according to the Nouwen staff member(s) responsible for the creation of the majority of the file. There are four groupings: files 1270-1281 consist of material from 1980 to 1986 created predominantly by Carol Plantinga and Peter Weiskel; files 1282-1303 consist material from 1986 to 1995 predominantly created by Connie Ellis; files 1304-1311 consist of material from 1984 to 1993 predominantly created by Lydia Banducci; and files 1312-1404 consist of material from 1985 to 1997 predominantly created by Margaret Sutton. Within each chronological grouping the material is arranged alphabetically by file title. There is also one file containing financial invoices, receipts, and financial statements from the period of 1956 - 1967.

Subseries F4-6-3: Personal accountant files

Date: June 1981 - April 1995, predominant January 1989 - December 1994 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of material sent by Nouwen's personal accountant (Joe Sarno) to Nouwen's office at Daybreak in January 1996. Includes the 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994 income tax returns and supporting documentation. Also includes permanent reference material from Nouwen's retirement accounts, health insurance, 1995 Visa statements, and the US Internal Revenue Service.

Joe Sarno was Nouwen's personal accountant from the mid-1970s until April 1995. He was based in Connecticut and became Nouwen's accountant when Nouwen was at Yale Divinity School. Sarno was responsible for Nouwen's income tax returns, American bank accounts, credit cards, and retirement funds. It is assumed that he was responsible for the bulk of Nouwen's financial activities before Nouwen's move to L'Arche Daybreak in 1987. However, since legislation only requires records be kept for seven years, the majority of the records he sent to Daybreak only go back to 1989. Completing Nouwen's 1994 tax return was Sarno's last responsibility as Nouwen's accountant.

According to correspondence found in box 248 file 1438, Sarno sent two boxes of material to Nouwen's office containing income tax records and permanent reference material. The material was found in large manilla envelopes with Sarno's handwriting on the outside describing the envelopes' contents. The envelopes were bound with elastics and did not appear to have been opened since being sent to Nouwen's office in January 1996.

Subseries F4-6-4: Expenses files

Date: August 1986 - December 1994 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of material regarding Nouwen's expenses. The files were started by Nouwen's staff after his arrival at L'Arche Daybreak in August 1986. Statements, invoices, and receipts (some with notes) were collected according to category and month. Categories included automobile, business meals, donations, food and entertainment, gifts to individuals, income tax payments, miscellaneous, office supplies, office supplies and equipment, personal, photocopies and photographs, postage/courier, promotion, purchase services, telephone, temporary help, and travel.

It is believed that the expenses files were filed with the General Financial Files during their active year. The files were arranged alphabetically by expense category and by month within each category. At the end of the year each category was bundled together and the General Financial File folders were reused. Therefore, the expenses files for 1995 and 1996 can be found in the General Financial Files and this sub-series consists of the expenses files from August 1986 to December 1994. They are arranged chronologically by year, alphabetically by category within each year, and chronologically by month within each category. The exception being 1986 where months August to December were bundled together.

Every month a summary of expenses was sent by Nouwen's office to Nouwen's personal accountant, Joe Sarno. These summaries can be found in the Personal Accountant Files and the General Financial Files. All expenses were also recorded in the Ledgers and can be found in the Ledgers sub-series.

Series F4-7: Teaching materials

Date: 1966 - 1985, 1994; predominant 1971 - 1981 (creation)

Scope and content: Series consists of materials created by Nouwen for use in his capacity as a professor and instructor. These materials include notes for lectures, reading notes, class lists, handouts for students, class schedules, course evaluations, audio recordings of lectures, and records related to the administration of courses.

Series has been divided into two sub-series:

1.7.1. Course handouts, lecture, reading and students notes (1966 - 1994, predominant 1972 - 1981). This sub-series also includes 14 audio recordings of Nouwen's lectures and 357 art slides which he used in his lectures on Van Gogh.

1.7.2. Administrative records (1966 - 1994, predominant 1983-1985)

Further details can be found on the sub-series description level.

Physical description: 235 cm of textual records, 14 audio cassettes (21 hours, 40 min.), 357 photographs: col. ; 35 mm negatives (in slide mount)

Note [General] : Title based on contents of the series. Many of the early photo duplications are fading. Adhesive has been used for small slips of paper, which has caused some staining. The Yale Divinity School Library suffered a flood on New Year's Day, 1988, causing water damage and mould growth on a number of files and bound volumes. Some of the articles by students in the Van Gogh materials contains post cards that have been adhered using adhesive tape. There is some material (notably Nouwen's reading notes) in this series in Dutch, French and Greek. Letters of recommendation for former students and co-workers are located in the General Files series. Amateur recordings of some lectures are in the Sound Recording series. As well, there are live sound recordings of his lectures that were accrued after Nouwen's death from former students but were not a part of his personal collection of his recorded lectures. The series also has considerable overlap with materials contained within the Calendar Files. The Calendar Files deal with events and appointments Nouwen attended in his various capacities as a teacher, author, friend, colleague and priest. Many of these events relate to lectures or workshops Nouwen led as a university professor but do not necessarily relate directly to his post at a specific university. Some drafts of lectures and sermons can be found in the Manuscripts series. Calendar Files relating to Nouwen's guest lecturing at Regis College include files 904, 921, 924, 936, 958, and 984. Some correspondents that have particular relevance to Nouwen's function as a university professor include: Annice Callahan, George Rupp, Colin Williams, Padraic O'Hare, Peter Weiskel, John Mogabgab, and Parker Palmer. Materials relating to Nouwen's guest lectures for Sister Annice Callahan can be found in Accession 2002 33.

Subseries F4-7-1: Course lectures, handouts, reading, and student notes

Date: 1966 - 1994 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of bound volumes of materials and loose documents created and used by Nouwen for his teaching positions various academic institutions in both North America and Europe. This includes reading notes, preparation notes, lecture notes, typed lecture summaries, course handouts and syllabi, many of which are heavily annotated by Nouwen. It also includes lectures, letters, notes, assignments and course evaluations produced by Nouwen's students and teaching assistants. In addition to the course-specific bound volumes, there are two bound volumes that are labelled as "miscellaneous class material" that relate to Nouwen's early career from 1959 to 1976. This sub-series has been divided into 22 sub-sub series based on the course titles and subjects which Nouwen taught between 1961 and 1994, except for one sub-sub series involving the two-volume set of collected class materials mentioned above.

The sub-sub series are:

1. Developmental Psychology
2. Psychology of Personality
3. Abnormal Psychology
4. Psychology of Religion
5. Pastoral Care
6. Christian Spirituality
7. Ministry to the Elderly
8. Hospitality
9. Discipline and Discipleship
10. Prison Ministry
11. Collected Class Materials
12. The Life and Works of Thomas Merton
13. Ministry and Spirituality
14. Ministry in Non-Religious Institutions
15. The Ministry of Vincent Van Gogh
16. Compassion
17. Education and Community
18. Hesychasm
19. Desert Spirituality and Contemporary Ministry
20. Spiritual Direction / Spiritual Life and Spiritual Direction
21. Introduction to the Spiritual Life
22. Early Dutch course material

Physical description: 217 cm of textual records.- 357 photographs : col. negatives ; 35 mm (mounted). - 14 audio cassettes (21 hours, 40 min.)

Note [General] : Title based on contents of the sub-series.

In practice, bound volumes of handouts (articles, photocopies, newspaper clippings) were dated according to when they were bound, rather than when the material was first created. Bound volumes of lecture notes or lecture summaries as well as reading notes tended to be dated according to when they were first created, as the content of these documents is more relevant.

File includes an assignment sheet without Nouwen's name - perhaps Nouwen received the assignment from another person. Nouwen lists his name, at Piusconvict, Nijmegen, on the assignment. Piusconvict in Nijmegen is likely a residence for priests studying at the University of Nijmegen. It is possible that Nouwen was teaching a course while living at the Piusconvict. File also includes ten submissions of wedding speeches. Nouwen has written the last name of the student in the top right hand corner of each page. The names include: H. v. F4-7-1-2074	File - Notes on psychoanalytic theory [between 1966 and 1968] 2.0 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. The title page of the bound volume includes "Yale Divinity School", but one assumes this only means that Nouwen bound the material after his arrival at Yale. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of Nouwen's typed notes and handwritten notes on psychoanalytic theory as well as photocopies of other source material. They include criticism and analysis of Freud and Jung, as well as works by Menninger, Godin and Machler. At the end of the bound volume there is a series of typed question sheets regarding Carl G. Jung and Erich Fromm. Some of the handwritten notes are on paper containing a University of Notre Dame watermark. These reading notes and typed handouts are most likely for a course taught by Nouwen called Psychology 101: Developmental Psychology or a course called Clinical Psychology at the University of Notre Dame between 1966 and 1968.
F4-7-1-2075	File - Reading notes and handouts [between 1966 and 1968] 2.5 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. These typed notes may be earlier materials from Nouwen's education at the Menninger Clinic in Topeka, Kansas between 1964 and 1966. However, the handwritten portions of this bound volume are on paper containing the Notre Dame University watermark. Scope and content: File consists of bound volume of typed notes and some handwritten notes regarding works by Selma H. Fraiberg, E.Z. Friedenberg, H.C. Rumke, G.W. Allport, Erik H. Erikson, Sheldon and Carl Rogers. Many of the typed notes on particular authors are followed by a page of typed questions that clarify key points. These materials relate to the course Psychology of Personality (course code Psych 102), which Nouwen taught, or co-lectured at the University of Notre Dame between 1966 and 1968.
F4-7-1-2076	File - Reading and lecture notes [between 1966 and 1968] 2.0 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of handwritten reading and lecture notes, including notes on Gordon Allport's "Psychology of the Individual", Freud, Jung, Carl Rogers, E. Fromm, and Sheldon's "Constitutional Psychology". Includes some typed handouts materials relate to the course Psychology of Personality (course code Psych 102), which Nouwen taught, or co-lectured at the University of Notre Dame between 1966 and 1968.

F4-7-1-2077	File - Reading or lecture notes [between 1966 and 1970] 2.0 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. It appears that this collection of materials were bound after 1972 when Nouwen had settled at Yale. The title page of the bound volume states "Yale Divinity School" under Nouwen's name. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of handwritten notes on abnormal psychology, as well as several handouts and a typed article by Simon Vinkenoog in Dutch, "Brief aan Hans van Zon, Mens door Simon Vinkenoog uit 'Propria Cures', 22 februari, 1969". The title page of the bound volume describes the notes as lectures, but the bulk of the content consists of clinical definitions and psychological theory, rather than fully developed presentations. The majority of the notes are handwritten on paper containing a University of Notre Dame watermark. The material was used in a course on Abnormal Psychology (course code Psych 103) which Nouwen appears to have taught or co-lectured during his time at the University of Notre Dame (1966 - 1968) and a course he claims to have taught while in the Netherlands (1968 - 1970) at either the Joint Pastoral Institute in Amsterdam or the Catholic Theological Institute of Utrecht.
F4-7-1-2078	File - Lectures and reading notes on William James' "Varieties of Religious Experience" [between 1966 and 1970] 1.6 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. The title page of the bound volume includes "Yale Divinity School", but this likely means that he bound the material after his arrival at Yale. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of handwritten lectures (numbered III to XIII) based on William James' "Varieties of Religious Experience". The lectures are titled "The Reality of the Unseen", "The Religion of the Healthy-minded", "The Sick Soul", "The Divided Self and the Process of Unification", "Conversion", and "Saintliness". The file also contains a photocopied article by Carl W. Christenssen titled "Religious Conversion" as well as a typed summary of James' 1963 publication (by Nouwen?) and a typed document of quotations from the 1965 work by Dag Hammarskjöld titled "Markings". These lecture notes and reading notes are most likely for a course taught by Nouwen on the Psychology of Religion at either the University of Notre Dame between 1966 and 1967 or in Holland between 1968 and 1970.

F4-7-1-2079	File - Reading notes and sources on religion and psychology [between 1966 and 1970] 65 pages of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. It appears that this collection of materials were bound after 1972 when Nouwen had settled at Yale. The title page of the bound volume states "Yale Divinity School" under Nouwen's name. This bound volume also contains materials for Nouwen's other courses on Pastoral Care and Christian Spirituality. Some of the typed materials may be the product of Nouwen's time at the Menninger Clinic in Topeka, Kansas between 1964 and 1966. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of handwritten lecture notes by Nouwen as well as typed notes and source articles. Materials in this bound volume relevant to Nouwen's 1966 and 1967 Psychology of Religion courses include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Section I of the bound volume titled "Concerning Allport's "Religion and Prejudice"" which includes typed summaries of work by Allport, Monty Kuka and Randy Fasnacht.</li> </ul> -parts of Section II of the bound volume titled " General Sources" which includes typed excerpts from works by Mircea Eliade, Erich Fromm, Jung, and Erich Neumann. -parts of Section III of the bound volume titled "Religious Growth in Psychological Perspective: outlines and lecture notes" including a typed summary of works by Erik H. Erikson, Edgar Z. Friedenberg, and Charles W. Stewart, notes on Gordon Allport, as well as handwritten and typed lecture notes by Nouwen on the subject of adolescent religion.
F4-7-1-2079a	File - Case study notes [1966 - 1974?] 0.6 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Material contains annotations by Nouwen. Scope and content: File consists of copies of miscellaneous loose case study notes. There are five cases represented. Each of the five original case studies features annotations by Nouwen, and each case study has been retyped with certain information removed (who conducted the case, etc.). These notes were likely prepared by Nouwen for use in one of his Pastoral Care courses either at the University of Notre Dame or Yale University.

F4-7-1-2080	File - Articles and reading notes [between 1966 and 1968] 1.6 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. The contents of this file all contain three-hole punch marks, which are also present in the materials attributed to the 1967 summer course on the Psychology of Religion. However, what few documents that contain dates are for August 1966. As well, student assignments for the summer course (see file 2085) mention works by Goodenough, Freud and Allport, authors reviewed in this file. It is possible that Nouwen used his 1966 notes for his summer course as well. Scope and content: File consists of photocopied articles and typed summaries related to psychology, in particular the psychology of religion. One summary of a work by John Eudes Bamberger contains a typed critique by Nouwen and a response to this critique by Bamberger. These reading notes most likely relate to Nouwen's fall semester course Psychology 121A: Psychology of Religion of 1966. The materials of this file may also be the product of Nouwen's education at the Menninger Clinic in Topeka, Kansas between 1964 and 1966. File also includes an article titled "Gordon William Allport" by Nouwen as well as articles and summaries of works by Bamberger, E.R. Goodenough, Paul W. Pryser, and Marguerite Secheyaye. There is also a section of typed case notes titled "Pastoral Care", the author is unknown.
F4-7-1-2082	File - "From Magic to Faith" lecture notes [1967?] 23 pages of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. The lecture papers have three-hole punch marks, which are also present in the materials attributed to the 1967 summer course for Psychology of Religion. "From Magic to Faith" is also mentioned in a single sheet listing lecture topics in file 2083. It is given the date of July 21. Scope and content: File consists of 23 typed pages of a lecture titled "From Magic to Faith," which discusses the religious development of individuals from childhood to adulthood from a psychological perspective. The lecture was most likely presented in Nouwen's "summer school" course Psychology 121: "Special Topics" : Psychology of Religion in 1967. Student assignments for the summer school course mention their interest of the psychological development of individuals from infancy through adulthood.

F4-7-1-2083	File - Reading and lecture notes on pastoral psychology and psychology of religion [1967?] 1.5 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Previously numbered: 19 - 68A. Scope and content: File consists of handwritten notes by Nouwen. The majority appear to be reading and lecture notes on the psychology of religion. There are a number of documents in this file that can be directly attributed to Nouwen's summer school course of 1967 on the Psychology of Religion, including a list of lecture titles and an assignment outline. There is also evidence that some of the documents relate to another Pastoral Care course for priests offered during the summer of 1967 as well. These documents include lecture notes titled " Pastoral Counseling", "professional identity", "Pastoral care in a time of crisis", "Mental Health - Mental Illness", and "depression". File also consists of extensive reading notes on Coe's Psychology of Religion, and a short collection of notes on mysticism. This file seems to include material related to a 1967 course on Pastoral Care for priests. Nouwen mentions in his Curriculum Vitae that he taught a course titled "Pastoral Psychology" during his years at Notre Dame. This may be the course to which he is referring. There are several handwritten notes listing nine probable seminarians or priests who participated in such a course. These names are not present on the class lists of either Psychology 121: "Special Topics": Psychology of Religion for 1967 nor are they listed on Nouwen's initial course Pastoral Care held in 1966.
F4-7-1-2086	File - Draft of a bibliography on pastoral theology [between 1968 and 1970] 1 page of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. File contains notes in Dutch. Scope and content: File consists of a single sheet of grid paper (42 cm x 33 cm) folded in half . On it are handwritten lists by Nouwen of works and articles on pastoral psychology, religion, theology and symbolism. Using a different ink, Nouwen has titled the main list "Pastoral Ps.". Some of the marginal notes and subject titles by Nouwen appear to have been written in Dutch. This bibliographical draft most likely relates to Nouwen's teaching in the Netherlands at the Joint Pastoral Institute in Amsterdam and the Catholic Theological Institute of Utrecht between 1968 and 1970.

F4-7-1-2087	File - Lecture notes and notes for lecture courses, 1968 - 1972 Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Many of the lecture notes are typed on letterhead from the Newman Christ the Teacher University Chapel and Student Center (DeKalb, IL) and Yale University. File contains materials that are in Dutch. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of typed lecture notes, handwritten notes and handouts created and used by Nouwen for the course Christian Spirituality. The lectures appear to have been typed by Nouwen and are annotated by him. The lectures cover such topics as Eastern Orthodoxy, eastern and western monasticism, discipline, fragmentation and loneliness, as well as such authors as Thomas Merton, Gary Cash, Joe Freeman, Walter Parr and Mary Hobgood. The materials of the file relate primarily to Nouwen's first course at Yale Divinity School, however, there is also evidence that materials of this file relate to a course on Christian Spirituality taught between 1968 and 1970 in the Netherlands. There are 17 handwritten pages of notes in Dutch, and many of the lecture notes are typed on Dutch letterhead.	[between 1968 and 1972, predominant 1972]	1.0 cm of textual records
F4-7-1-2088	File - Lecture notes and handouts for fall 1972 course Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Note [General] : Pastoral Care and Counseling was offered by Nouwen during the fall semester on Mondays from September 18 to December 11, 1972 at Yale Divinity School. At that time, Nouwen was an Assistant Professor of Pastoral Theology. Nouwen continued with this course in his efforts to teach Divinity students practical psychological techniques, such as case-recording and clinical theory, that they could integrate into their jobs as pastoral counselors. Nouwen drew strongly on the work of Charles Menninger and Seward Hiltner for this course. The course also had guest speakers such as Colin Williams and Doug Morrison, films and field trips, but was more lecture-centric than past Pastoral Care courses. This is one of the first courses where Nouwen had his students divide up into small groups to discuss the course material. His lectures for this course also cover his preoccupation with clowns and the works of Rembrandt van Rijn. An assistant to Nouwen in this course may have been Bill McSwiggin. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of typed and annotated lecture notes and handouts. The bound volume also appears to have been annotated by Nouwen after it was compiled.	[between August and December 1972]	0.6 cm of textual records

On the back of the last page there are annotations by Nouwen listing names. It is not clear if these materials relate to a seminar class or a seminar which Nouwen and Walter Gaffney presented at a conference held at the University of Notre Dame. There is evidence that Nouwen attended a conference entitled "Ministry to the Aged and Dying", which was co-sponsored by the Institute on Religion and Aging at the University of Notre Dame. This community is also home to Br. David Steindl-Rast , an author that is frequently cited by Nouwen in his courses at Yale Divinity School. Nouwen used many of the authors he read during this retreat in his courses Discipline and Discipleship, Thomas Merton, and Christian Spirituality. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of handwritten and typed reading notes by Nouwen. The reading notes are dated and record Nouwen's reading regime for the summer. Some of the reading notes are in Dutch. Many of the reading notes are recorded on Mount Savior letterhead. Nouwen included notes on works by Mark Schoof, Jan de Harlog, Sydney Ahlstrom, Andre Louf, Thomas Merton, David Stanley, S.E. Morison, Anne Morrow Lindbergh, Carlos Castaneda, Joseph Chilton Pearce, Jan de Hartog, Black Elk, Johannes B. Metz, Raimundo Pannikar, Harvey Cox, Andre Schwartz-Bart, Simon Wiesenthal, Adele M. Fiske, Simone Weil, John Howard Yoder, Abraham Joshua Heschel, J.R. M. Maas, Anselm Schulz, Robert Rosenthal, and Paul Pruyser Also included are notes Nouwen took during a conversation with John Baptist Robinson as well as two articles, one by Thomas Merton titled "Final Integration: toward a 'Monastic Therapy', the other a magazine and newsprint article by Sara Davidson titled "Baba Ram Dass: The Metamorphic Journey of Richard Alpert."

Childs. Nouwen has provided a title page for these notes and has annotated it as "some core questions". These notes have been annotated by Nouwen. These reading notes appear to be in their original file. The file folder is labelled " Nouwen: Memory: notes on Child's M&amp;T". It appears that Nouwen would have produced these research files in the course of his reading and later the bulk of material would have been collated and bound into single volumes. The theme of memory was explored in the courses on Ministry and Spirituality in 1975 and 1977.

These reading notes appear to have been drawn from a number of sources such as Dahl, Elie Wiesel, Seward Hiltner, Abraham J. Heschel and Martin Francis. These reading notes appear to be in their original file. The file folder is labelled "Nouwen: Notes and Excerpts. Ref. Memory". The notes also contain a page titled "Confessing faith in God today. Draft report of the July Consultation: Institute for Ecumenical and Cultural Research". It appears that Nouwen would have produced these resource files in the course of his research and later the bulk of material would have been collated and bound into single volumes. The theme of memory was integrated into Nouwen's 1975 and 1977 courses Ministry and Spirituality.

This bound volume has been filed under 1974, as the predominant material is attributable to that year.  Scope and content: File consists of six articles by Morris M. Gondereau, Joseph Sattern and Karl Menninger. There is also a reading list for the course. These articles are part of a bound volume of collected materials.
F4-7-1-2101	File - Lecture notes, handouts and articles for Pastoral Care 1967 - 1974, 1.0 cm of textual records predominant 1974  Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. This bound volume has been filed under 1974, due to the majority of the material being attributable to that year.  Scope and content: File consists of handwritten, typed and annotated reading and lecture notes for two of Nouwen's courses on Pastoral Care. These materials are part of a bound volume of collected materials. Handwritten and typed reading notes and lecture notes for the 1967 course are located in the second section of the bound volume. This section contains extensive notes on Boisen and notes on a film on Carl Rogers and his client-centred therapy. Material relevant to the 1974 course is located in the third section of the bound volume, and includes typed, handwritten, and annotated lecture notes by Nouwen.

This course had developed out of Nouwen's own monastic experiences and he hoped to explore ways of integrating the main aspects of Christian spirituality into modern society, rather than offering a straightforward historical approach to Christian spirituality. The discussions focused on the relationship between prayer and the common life, and prayer and study. Although monasticism was the focus of this course, Nouwen hoped to use the monastic world as a catalyst to raise and respond to questions about modern spirituality that were not typically monastic. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of typed and handwritten lecture notes and reading notes by Nouwen. There is only two pages of typed lecture notes. The rest of the bound volume consists of handwritten reading notes or lecture notes by Nouwen which are heavily annotated. The reading notes covers works by Michael Novak, David Steindl-Rast, Anselmus Stolz, Diadoque de Photice, James Hannay, St. Benedict, and Thomas Merton.

The class was held on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 10:30 am to 12:00 noon. Ministry and Spirituality focused on the relationship between the practices of the ministry and the lifestyle of the minister, using the themes of solitude, intimacy, and prayer. Nouwen also uses the figure of the clown in this course. These lectures included guest speakers and specific case studies. The course required students to write several reflection papers on their experiences and reading as well as write a final paper. Students were expected to participate in additional weekly meetings of small discussion groups of eight or less. Students were also given the opportunity to visit local ministries and religious communities. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of typed lecture notes. A follow up letter from Bouvier to the Letter Project indicates that it was Steve Berry who created the cards. See accession 2011 20. Scope and content: File consists of a card index of typed quotations and references from the correspondence of Vincent van Gogh. The cards are arranged by subject and usually contain the letter number, volume, and page number from an edition of "The Complete Letters of Vincent van Gogh". It is clear that Nouwen owned a 1978 Bulfinch Press edition, however, he may have had access to an 1958 edition as well. As such, the exact date of their creation is not clear. In addition to the index cards, there are three folded sheets of paper. Two of the sheets are alphabetical lists of the subject headings (i.e. "The Mill", "Models", "Money", "Nature", "The Ordinary", etc.). The other is a typed copy of a 1875 letter to Van Gogh from Paris. A 'post-it' note has been attached to this letter reading "Removed from back of card file to make space". This note is not in Nouwen's hand. As well, the handwritten labels on these index card alphabetical dividers are not in Nouwen's hand. There are 13 cards which are out of order and can be found filed before "A".

The seminar was limited to 15 students. In it, Nouwen hoped to raise questions about the nature of Christian ministry, using the life and works of van Gogh as a case study. The semester was divided into two sections: during the first term, students focused on the chronology of van Gogh's life while the second section was thematic and centred on the individual projects of seminar participants. Students were required to write two papers. They were also required to read van Gogh's correspondence to his brother Theo and watch the 1956 film "Lust for Life". A guest lecturer may have been Carl A. Newlin. A teaching and research assistant may have been Bailey Green. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of typed lecture and reading notes and photocopied handouts (including a syllabus, class schedule, and class list). The bound volume also includes a typed chronology highlighting the main periods of van Gogh's life, biographical data, a detailed bibliography, as well as a list of books which van Gogh himself read as cited in his letters. The bound volume also includes a number of poems selected by students in the class as well as photocopies of student presentation notes. In addition, there are short typed summaries of students' seminar and paper topics. Conditions governing use: No reproduction of this material without permission of the Archivist.

Parker J. Palmer was Dean of Studies at Pendle Hill during the 1970s and formed a close collaborative relationship with Nouwen. Palmer often guest-lectured many of Nouwen's courses at Yale Divinity School. Nouwen spent considerable amounts of time at Pendle Hill from 1976 to 1982, attending and teaching at the Center's summer institutes. There is evidence that Nouwen and Mogabgab spent many afternoons at Pendle Hill in the late 1970s discussing spiritual issues with Parker Palmer. Nouwen did not appear to regard his teaching at Pendle Hill as an extension of his function as a university professor. The bulk of materials were filed as Calendar files, and Nouwen did not have his lecture notes or handouts for the Summer Institute bound as he did his university courses. However, the insights Nouwen gained through his experiences and collaborations at Pendle Hill had a significant influence over his course content at both Yale Divinity School and Harvard Divinity School, specifically Ministry and Spirituality, Compassion, Thomas Merton, and Education and Community. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of handwritten reading notes by Nouwen created during the summer months of 1977, many of which were written during Nouwen's Pendle Hill retreat from June 26 to July 1. Many of the reading notes are dated, and cover works by Max Frisch, William A. Barry SJ, John Howard Yoder, R.P. Martin, Parker Palmer, Thomas Hora, Kai Erikson, Margaret Lewis Furse, Gerard Dekker, Jacques Ellul, Saint Seaphim of Sarov, Gene K. Hoffman, Kenneth Wooden, Gerard Egan and Michael Cowan, Basil Pennington, Archimandrite Sophrony, Kalistos Ware, Saint Alban and St. Sergius. There are four pages of reading notes that are written on the back of a letter from Parker Palmer to Nouwen outlining the schedule of the Pendle Hill retreat. There is also a heavily annotated draft of a course syllabus for the fall 1977 lecture course Compassion. There are also eight handwritten pages of sermon notes for the Mercy Center for the dates June 6, to June 20.

Parker J. Palmer was Dean of Studies at Pendle Hill during the 1970s and formed a close collaborative relationship with Nouwen. Palmer often guest-lectured many of Nouwen's courses at Yale Divinity School. Nouwen spent considerable amounts of time at Pendle Hill from 1976 - 1982, attending and teaching at the Center's summer institutes. There is evidence that Nouwen and Mogabgab spent many afternoons at Pendle Hill in the late 1970s discussing spiritual issues with Parker Palmer. Nouwen did not appear to regard his teaching at Pendle Hill as an extension of his function as a university professor. The bulk of materials were filed as Calendar files, and Nouwen did not have his lecture notes or handouts for the Summer Institute bound as he did his university courses. However, the insights Nouwen gained through his experiences and collaborations at Pendle Hill had a significant influence over his course content at both Yale Divinity School and Harvard Divinity School, specifically Ministry and Spirituality, Compassion, Thomas Merton, and Education and Community. Scope and content: File consists of materials related to Pendle Hill, predominantly to the Summer Institute, a 5-week retreat run between June 28 and early August 1982 where Nouwen taught. There are also materials from the 1970s but they were most likely gathered by Nouwen for use during this event. There are 36 handwritten pages by Nouwen which appear to be preparation notes for various lectures he gave at the institute. There is also a 6-page typed document by John Mogabgab titled "Pendle Hill Conversations Meeting 4 (October 27, 1977) Summary Notes". Material that relates directly to the 1982 retreat includes correspondence from Pendle Hill dated May 17, 1982 to the 43 participants in the retreat regarding housing arrangements, health insurance, typewriting and cooperative housekeeping chores. There is also a typed list of all the participants and their addresses. As well, there is a eight page group of typed notes titled "Some Notes for a Five Weeks [sic] Reflection on the Gospel of Luke" as well as sheet music and a Curriculum Vitae of a lay reader from Sydney, Australia. There is also a photocopy of a long-distance phone bill containing a letter from one of Nouwen's suite mates regarding an overpayment. Nouwen's long-distance calls are noted. File also includes three pamphlets from Pendle Hill, namely Parker Palmer's "Meeting for Learning" and "A Place called Community" and Douglas V. Steere's "On Speaking out of the Silence", as well as some ephemera. Also contained in this file is a program schedule for a commemoration conference on Thomas Merton, hosted by Columbia University between November 27 and December 10, 1978. It appears that Nouwen cancelled some of his plans for this conference to visit Pendle Hill. See Weekly Calendars 1978. File also contains an introduction package for the institute consisting of a welcome letter by Parker Palmer and brief staff biographies.

It was held on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 9:30 am - 11:00 pm. The course was based on the previous year's course but with the Gospel of John replacing the Gospel of Luke as the core text. The course emphasized the relationship between The Word and spiritual life and the second term used a thematic approach to discuss intimacy, fecundity and ecstasy. Students were asked to keep a journal of reflections on John, class presentations, group debates and lecture topics. They were also required to attend small group discussions of six to eight people and write a mid-course response. Unlike the 1984 course, students were only required to have two people read their journal and write a response. No grades were given for the course. In March, Nouwen organized a trip to Haiti for four students to assist the L'Arche community there. Teaching Assistants included David LeBlanc, Stephen Pavy, Peter Weiskel, Barbara Ernst, Michael O'Laughlin, and Jim Smith. Scope and content: File consists of typed, handwritten, annotated and photocopied handouts. These handouts are the original copies which Nouwen used to photocopy and distribute. Some of the documents appear to be early drafts of summary lecture notes that were later edited and distributed to the 1985 lecture class. This includes material written by Nouwen's teaching assistants. There are original newspaper clippings which were later photocopied as handouts. Also contains material from Nouwen's 1984 lecture course Introduction to the Spiritual Life and may also be used to develop his 1985 summer course as well.

The letter (dated March 9, 1985) is from Margaret Farley to Nouwen, giving him permission to duplicate her paper "Can Faith Survive Injustice? A question for women in the church" and distribute it to his class. The file contains this article as well as a photocopy titled "For a Peace Church Today: A Short Catechism" by George Hunsinger. This document is dated January 1985. An article by Dorothee Solle is also included, titled: Life in its Fullness. These documents are likely articles that Nouwen considered distributing to his class as handouts. Nouwen may have used these articles in his 1985 course Introduction to the Spiritual Life at Harvard Divinity School, or in his 1985 summer course Introduction to the Spiritual Life at Boston College. However, none of the material in this file appears in either of the 1985 bound volumes for Harvard and Boston College.

The course was offered during the spring semester on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 9:30 am - 11:00 pm. The course was based on the previous year's lecture course but with key changes. The key text of the course was the Gospel of John, not the Gospel of Luke of previous years. Nouwen placed an emphasis on the relationship between the Word and Spiritual Life and for the second term used a thematic approach to discuss intimacy, fecundity and ecstasy. During the March break, Nouwen organized a trip to Haiti for four students in the class to visit and assist the L'Arche community there. Students were asked to keep a journal of reflections on the Gospel of John as well as class presentations, group debates, and lecture topics. Unlike in 1984, students were only required to have two other people read their journal and write a response. Students were also required to attend small group discussions of six to eight people as well as write a mid-course response. No grades were given for the course, instead students who fulfilled the requirements received a half-course credit. It was held on Tuesdays and Thursdays, from 9:30 am - 11:00 pm. The course was based on the previous year's course but with the Gospel of John replacing the Gospel of Luke as the core text. The course emphasized the relationship between The Word and spiritual life and the second term used a thematic approach to discuss intimacy, fecundity and ecstasy. Students were asked to keep a journal of reflections on John, class presentations, group debates, and lecture topics. They were also required to attend small group discussions of six to eight people and write a mid-course response. Unlike the 1984 course, students were only required to have two people read their journal and write a response. No grades were given for the course. In March, Nouwen organized a trip to Haiti for four students to assist the L'Arche community there. Teaching Assistants included David LeBlanc, Stephen Pavy, Peter Weiskel, Barbara Ernst, Michael O'Laughlin, and Jim Smith. Scope and content: File consists of one typed page of four prayers. The title of this handout is "Four Prayers for Shalom" and is labelled "Handout #36".

Have you been faithful in attendance at the large lecture/discussion meetings in McGuinn Auditorium, excepting necessary absences of which the staff was advised? What have you found most helpful and how would you describe our unfinished agenda?</li> <li>2. Have you been faithful in small group attendance and participation? In what ways has this been fruitful and/or frustrating for you?</li> <li>3. Have you begun to write, to preserve a journal of the Spirit in your life? Are patterns emerging? In what sense is this discipline easy or difficult? Have you chosen a person to read your journal?</li> <li>4. How is your reading of John's gospel witness to Jesus been going? In what ways has it reinforced or expanded your views about Jesus? What difficulties have arisen?</li> </ol>

The letter is dated October 7, 1985 and was written from L'Arche Daybreak. In the letter Nouwen reflects on the experiences of the course and also discusses the objectives of L'Arche. Nouwen asks his students to keep the organization in mind when ministering to people in their own communities and asks his students to "help me make it better known". The letter also includes three locations of contact, L'Arche Daybreak, the Maryknoll Residence at Cambridge, MA, and the L'Arche community of Trosly-Breuil in France.

In addition to a syllabus, class list and bibliography, the volume contains typed lecture summary notes that are only slightly modified from the Harvard lectures. The handwritten lecture notes contained in this bound volume, however, appear to be the original outlines Nouwen used during his lecturing. A number of items were filed loosely into this bound volume. They are: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>-4 pages of photocopied excerpts from Nouwen's Genesee Diary</li> <li>-4 copies of 'Loving the Enemy' Scripture References</li> <li>-1 sheet of handwritten scriptural quotes from the Gospel of Luke by Nouwen</li> <li>-a three page computer print-out dated October 29, 1985 [blank]</li> </ul>

F4-7-1-2247a	File - Lecture notes on St. John and the Word [October - December 1985] 0.1 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of one handwritten page of notes, likely for a lecture. Nouwen begins the notes with reference to St. John and then goes on with notes on the Word, Opposing the Word, Accepting the Word, and Friendship with the Incarnate Word. With reference to opposing the Word, Nouwen writes about how the 'Word is light shining into the darkness' and places the word in reference to light, truth, and life. With reference to accepting the word, Nouwen discusses the themes of faith and prayer. There are Biblical names listed under 'Friendship with the Incarnate Word', and these include The Baptist, John and Andrew, Martha and Mary, Lazarus, John, and Peter. Nouwen final point is as follows: "Point of arrival: not a theory - but a new kind of intimacy with the Lord."
F4-7-1-2248	File - Handouts for twelve-week course on prayer January 31 - April 18, 1994 1.6 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Note [General] : This 12-week course was held weekly on Mondays, between January 31 and April 18, 1994. However, it is not clear at what institution this course was taught and if Nouwen taught it or was a participant. The course code appears to have been PT 122, presumably Pastoral Theology 122. A "quiet day" scheduled for Friday April 22, 1994 and Saturday April 23, 1994 was held at 105 Garfield Street in Watertown, MA. This retreat center is less than 7 km from Harvard University. The course material deals with Ignation contemplation, mindful prayer, "spiritual friends", and other themes consistent with Nouwen's teaching. However, the majority of the assigned readings in this series are not consistent with Nouwen's teaching. Thus it is possible that Nouwen taught or participated in a seminar on prayer and meditation at an American institution, in an around Watertown, Massachusetts, during the spring semester of 1994. It is also likely that Nouwen used these notes as preparatory materials for his 1994 course Communion, Community, Ministry: Introduction to the Spiritual Life, offered during the fall semester at Regis College, University of Toronto. Scope and content: File consists of a series of typed and photocopied handouts ranging over a twelve week period. These handouts follow a format of guided meditation and in-depth prayer techniques. Each handout contains a written assignment and reading assignment, one of which is Nouwen's "Life of the Beloved". These materials were most likely used as preparation for Nouwen's 1994 course at Regis College.

F4-7-1-2249	File - Handouts and lecture summaries for fall 1994 lecture course Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Note [General] : Communion, Community, Ministry: Introduction to the Spiritual Life (course code RGP 2237F) was Nouwen's final academic course, offered by Regis College of the University of Toronto during the fall semester of 1994 on Mondays, 2:00 pm - 4:30 pm. The course studied the concepts of communion, community, and ministry as disciplines to create space for God. This course was associated with the 25th anniversary of L'Arche and members of the L'Arche Daybreak community participated in teaching the course with Nouwen. Students were graded on six bi-weekly reflection papers, their participation in the small group discussions, and a final paper. Nouwen was assisted by Sr. Sue Mosteller, Ben Vaanholt, and Gordie Henry. Nouwen's teaching assistant was Fr. Dennis Grecco, who scheduled student interviews and read student assignments. Scope and content: File consists of typed lecture summary notes which Nouwen most likely distributed to his students as handouts throughout the class. There appears to be a master copy on heavier paper for each handout which was used to make photocopies. There are also multiple copies of handouts as well, including Nouwen and Sue Mosteller's "Sacred History" (biography), course outlines, class schedules, and assignment guidelines. Second file folder contains a bound and signed copy of the course text from Nouwen addressed to Sue Mosteller.	Handouts and lecture summaries for fall 1994 lecture course [textual record] -- [between May - December 1994]	3.3 cm of textual records

Subseries F4-7-2: Administrative records

Date: 1966 - 1994, predominant 1983 - 1985 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of administrative materials relating to activities which Nouwen performed as a university professor within the administrative and social frameworks of the academic setting. This sub-series has been divided into sub-sub-series according to each academic institution, namely:

1. University of Notre Dame in Notre Dame, Indiana, USA.
  2. Yale Divinity School in New Haven, Connecticut, USA.
  3. Harvard Divinity School in Cambridge, Massachusetts, USA.
  4. Boston College, in Chestnut Hill, Massachusetts, USA.
- and,
5. Regis College, the University of Toronto, Canada.

It is highly likely that Nouwen created administrative records while a professor at the Joint Pastoral Institute of Amsterdam and the Catholic Theological Institute of Utrecht between 1968 - 1970. However, these records have not survived.

Physical description: 17.0 cm of textual records

Note [General] : Title based on contents of the sub-series. Related files include Financial files series, files 1274, 1275, 1276, 1277, 1281, 1405, 1406. There may also be letters of recommendation written by Nouwen for students, employees and colleagues in the General files.

F4-7-2-2254	File - Bills, invitations and correspondence regarding University of Notre Dame events, 1967 Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. These materials were originally organised in a green binder with a post-it that read "Bills invitations letter etc. ENGL". Scope and content: File consists of administrative records and correspondence between Nouwen and various priests for the year of 1967. These records and letters refer to three-day workshops for priests, as well as symposiums and lectures which Nouwen appears to have organised at the University of Notre Dame. This file also includes bills for providing food and beverages for the workshop as well as forms for reserving rooms for these events through Notre Dame's Center for Continuing Education. Some of the lecturers of these events include Dr. Seward Hiltner, Rev. Eugene C. Kennedy and Fr. Kilian McDonnell. The records also indicate that Nouwen himself presented a paper, "The Priest and his Mental Health" during a symposium, 'Priests in Contemporary Society' on May 4, 1967.	February 2 - May 21, 1967	0.5 cm of textual records

F4-7-2-2255	File - Department of Psychology faculty calendar and program proposal [between 1966 - 1968] 0.8 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of two documents. The first is a six-page typed calendar for Notre Dame's Department of Psychology. This document outlines the faculty of the department, the undergraduate and graduate programs, as well as a list of course descriptions, including course codes and the name of the professor who was teaching the course. Nouwen is listed in this document as an Assistant Professor. The second document appears to be a copy of a proposal for developing a program of Psychological Training and Psychological Services at the University of Notre Dame. This document mentions that a proposed psychological clinic would provide "the personnel and potentialities for the training of those religious at Notre Dame and elsewhere who have the responsibility of dealing with troubled students." The document also mentions the value of offering summer courses to train religious working as counselors at the university. The author of this document is unknown.
F4-7-2-2255b	File - Letter from Rev. James C. Buckley February 25, 1966 0.1 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of a two page carbon copy of a letter written to Nouwen in his capacity as a professor at the University of Notre Dame from Rev. James C. Buckley, C.S.C., Farley Hall on February 26, 1966. The letter is a reflection on Nouwen's Evaluation of Clinical Pastoral Training at Topeka State Hospital.
F4-7-2-2257	File - Catholic Students Association at Yale Divinity School 1977 - 1979, predominant 1979 1.5 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of correspondence, updates, newsletters and lists of Roman Catholic students related to the student organization, Catholic Students Association at Yale Divinity School. It appears Nouwen was a patron of the organization and requested that he be kept informed of any developments in the organization. It also seems he donated a piece of work: "The Spiritual Director: A Practical Guide" by Damien Isabell, to the organization, so they could distribute it to all the Roman Catholic students at Yale Divinity School. The majority of materials refer to the academic year of 1979. Prominent members of the organization included David Lamarre-Vincent, Nancy Heslin, and George Noonan.
F4-7-2-2258	File - The Catholic Students at Y.D.S. [after 1979] 0.6 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of two drafts and two typescripts of a reflection by Nouwen on the history of Catholic students at Yale Divinity School. The date of this work is not clear. In addition to the article there are two pages of criticism by people who read and edited the piece. The first page is a typed response by Margaret Farley. The other page contains handwritten responses from two separate people, one being female. The comments are generally negative and challenge Nouwen's interpretation of the Catholic community at Yale.

F4-7-2-2258a	File - Cohen and Powell Movers 1981 0.8 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Note [General] : Following his resignation from Yale Divinity School, Nouwen moved to the Abbey of the Genesee in Piffard, New York. Although this period marked a transition between teaching and his ministry in South America, Nouwen drew on his administrative support at the university to facilitate his dealings with the moving company. Scope and content: File consists of notes, invoices, contacts and correspondence between Cohen &amp; Powell Inc. movers, Nouwen, and his administrative assistant, Carol Plantinga, regarding Nouwen's move from his home in 51 Livingston Street, New Haven, CT to the Abbey of the Genesee in Piffard, NY in 1981.
F4-7-2-2259	File - Course proposals and monastic communities list [between 1971 - 1976] 0.6 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of a bound volume of typed and annotated course proposals, a proposal for a program in Christian Spirituality and a list of local monastic communities. These course proposals are heavily annotated by Nouwen and also contain tentative schedules by Nouwen of what courses he was hoping to teach for upcoming terms. These course proposals can be dated to Nouwen's early years at Yale Divinity School, from 1971 to 1976, and include proposals for Pastoral Care, Christian Spirituality, Discipline and Discipleship, Hospitality, Ministry and Spirituality (1975), and The Life and Works of Thomas Merton (1976). Proposals also include courses which Nouwen did not eventually teach, namely: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>-Human Development in Religious Perspective (an undergraduate course for the fall semester of 1973),</li> <li>-On the Spirituality of the Desert Fathers (may have developed into Hesychasm),</li> <li>-Seminar on Benedictine and Cistercian Spirituality (may have developed into The Life and Works of Thomas Merton, Hesychasm),</li> <li>-Seminar on the concept of "Memoria Christi" (may have developed into Compassion, Ministry and Spirituality),</li> </ul> and <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>-Ministry to People in Special Circumstances (later taught Ministry to the Elderly and Prison Ministry).</li> </ul>
F4-7-2-2262	File - Cassette tape duplication - 1984 January - June 1984 0.3 cm of textual records Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Scope and content: File consists of handwritten notes and a typed handout for Nouwen's 1984 class Introduction to the Spiritual Life. These notes are regarding efforts by Nouwen's teaching assistants to collect audio recordings of Nouwen's lectures and duplicate them to sell to students. This file includes several lists of Nouwen's lecture schedule and the date they were given. Of interest is the fact that one list indicates the division of lectures onto separate tapes. It appears that the assistants to group the guest lecture presentations (Jean Vanier and Br. David Steindl-Rast) together. This file also contains a typed handout distributed in class mentioning the availability of the cassette tapes.

It was labelled by Nouwen's assistant at "Boston College". Note [General] : The year of 1985 was a significant period of transition for Nouwen, and his decision to depart from academia in May also marks a change in his filing methods as well. Nouwen had a separate filing system which designated his Calendar files since the beginning of 1980, which he used to keep his social engagements (conferences, weddings, lectures, retreats etc.) organised. Following his departure from Harvard, Nouwen began to file engagements that would previously have been considered part of his function as a university professor, and therefore be filed under the name of the institution or bound into a volume as part of course handouts. Material for Boston College bridges this transition: although the course has its own bound volume of lecture summaries and handouts, much of the administrative files can be found under a Calendar file labelled "July 1985" and alternatively under the General file designation "Boston College". Scope and content: File consists of correspondence from Boston College addressed to Nouwen regarding his plans to teach a two-week summer course from July 8 - July 19, 1985. In these letters, administrators such as Padraic O'Hare, Donna Manocchio, and Sandra A. Hurley outline details of accommodation, tax-exemption, parking stickers, room bookings, and meal preparation. Four of these letters are photocopies. The original letters can be found in Calendar Files - July 1985, box 190, file 895.

Subseries F4-8-5: Pre-Theology degree 1966 records

Date: 1966 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of materials created by Nouwen, possibly in preparation for his doctoral degree in Theology. Sub-series contains two copies of Nouwen's diary from January 5 to February 21, 1966, during which time he visited several universities in the United States. This trip could possibly have been for research into schools for a potential doctoral program in Theology.

Subseries F4-8-6: Theology degree records

Date: 1970 - 1971 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of materials related to Nouwen's time pursuing his doctoral (doctoraal) degree in Theology at Nijmegen University. It appears as though Nouwen received the degree conferred upon completion of the doctoral exams although his thesis was not accepted. Note of December 18, 2013: file 319 unequivocally suggests that Nouwen pursued a degree in psychology (or to be precise in the Social Sciences) in early 1971. See also file 329, box 290 which contains a more elaborate outline of the thesis in question.

Series F4-9: Published works

Date: 1956 - 1996 ; predominant 1970 - 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Series consists of published works written and collected by Nouwen during his lifetime. Although there are some of his earliest writings dating from 1956, the series is predominantly dating from 1970 to 1996.

The series has been arranged in the following ten sub-series taking into account the author(s), subject(s), and format of the records:

- 1.9.1. Articles by Nouwen
- 1.9.2. Articles co-authored by Nouwen
- 1.9.3. Interviews of and articles about Nouwen

1.9.4. Book reviews

1.9.5. Scrapbook 1956-1965

1.9.6. Scrapbook 1965-1982

1.9.7. Books by Nouwen

1.9.8. Books contributed to by Nouwen

1.9.9. Books about Nouwen

1.9.10. Guides

A more detailed description of each sub-series, as well as each subseries arrangement can be found in the sub-series descriptions.

Physical description: 4.92 m of textual records

Note [General] : Title based on contents of the series. Some material in Dutch, German, French, Italian, Spanish, Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Swedish, Finnish, Danish, Norwegian, Polish, Czech, Portuguese, Indian, etc. Duplicates of some of the material are available in the archives. Any published work not collected by Nouwen, or published after his death in 1996 is located in the Special Collections of the Archives.

Subseries F4-9-1: Articles by Nouwen

Date: 1960 - 1996, predominant 1974, 1976 - 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of published articles written by Nouwen between 1960 and 1996. A majority of the articles are dated between 1975 and 1996 probably because in 1975 Nouwen began transferring the articles for storage at Yale. The articles are in various formats including entire periodicals, offprints, clippings, and photocopies as originally saved by Nouwen. Specific publications include Pastoral Psychology, Sojourners, Harvard Divinity Bulletin, Feu et Lumiere, The New Oxford Review, National Catholic Reporter, Weavings, and Zaken die God raken. Articles from church newsletters and other sources with limited publication are also included. In addition to featuring unique writings, the articles also represent published material that has been excerpted, condensed, adapted and reprinted from Nouwen's books, articles, and conference speeches. This sub-series contains only those articles written by Nouwen which he collected and does not contain all of his published articles as is evident by several incomplete article series.

The files are arranged chronologically. Each file features one unique published article although photocopies of newspapers as well as business cards and letters indicating the source of the articles are also included. Each file/article has been described at the item level.

Physical description: 65.0 cm of textual records

Language of the material:

- Dutch
- English
- French
- German
- Italian
- Japanese
- Spanish

Note [General]: Title based on contents of the sub-series.

Several articles have been hole punched, suggesting previous storage in a binder.

The articles are mostly in English and Dutch with some articles in French, German, Spanish, Italian, and Japanese. A few of the articles are found in more than one language.

Duplicates of many of the articles are also in the Archives.

The Publisher files series and Articles Co-authored by Nouwen sub-series contain information relating to this sub-series.

The article is about three perceived threats to the mental health of priests. These are described in terms of problems with time, with space and with self-understanding. 1) The new priest starts by giving his whole time to his ministry with little or no demarcation between work and rest. He thrives on being at the center, being available to everyone all the time. In time , because there is little change in fact, this can and does frequently lead to being ' an irritated, empty, routine, tired man'. In addition, at a daily level there is no demarcation of time between 'work' and 'home'. No time to stop and reflect or even pray. 2) 'Besides a healthy use of time, a healthy use of place is of great importance for the mental health of the priest'. Because he is always at work there is no space to find rest; because the people he lives with are the people he works with, there is no personal space. The demarcation lines of authority are vague and unhealthy. '... healthy spacing not only refers to healthy defining of places and rooms, but also connected with that, to healthy clarification of responsibilities and authority which belong to the different roofs under which we live'. 3) With a lack of privacy and no demarcation of personal, private relationships the priest often lacks a firm self-identity. 'Without a spiritual life and a good friend he is like a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal'. In addition, there is a lack of clarity of his role as a professional, he receives little praise from anyone including superiors so he does not know how well he is doing. The author stresses the importance of the priest's everyday confrontation with living theology in the people he serves and that is not used or appreciated.

	Note [General] : Published in Ave Maria National Catholic Weekly, 3 June 1967, p. 11-13, 30. The article was published in Intimacy : pastoral psychological essays / Henri J. M. Nouwen. Imprint Notre Dame, Ind. : Fides Publishers, c1969 as Chapter 5, 'Pentecostalism on campus' Scope and content: This item consists of a 4 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'A Critical Analysis' published in Ave Maria National Catholic Weekly, 3 June 1967, p. 11-13, 30. Nouwen discusses the rise and popularity of the Pentecostal movement at Notre Dame University in Indiana and states that the article 'is an attempt to clarify certain issues and to be of some help in an honest evaluation'. Nouwen looks at the phenomenon from three perspectives: 1) A Historical Perspective: He writes of the past and current religious atmosphere at Notre Dame. Here he credits an article by Killian McDonnell. O.S.B. (The Ecumenical Significance of the Pentecostal Movement) where there is a discussion of the 'sobriety' and 'objectivity' of Roman Catholic liturgy in contrast to the more emotional freedom and sense of belonging in the Pentecostal services. Nouwen suggests that this latter may answer a need in the new more ambitious and competitive atmosphere at the university. 2) A Psychological Perspective. Here Nouwen asks how we can evaluate this new movement by asking several questions: Does it heal or hurt? He suggests that evidence leads to a conclusion that while there may be a short term benefit 'it is very doubtful that it will cure deep mental suffering'. He also asks 'Can it be dangerous'? He states that 'for those who are not prepared every inducement of a strong emotion can break and do serious harm. He also suggests that for those who do not receive the 'gifts' such as tongues or joy there then may be the question 'what is wrong with me'. This leads to the need for direction, guidance and care. Finally he asks: Does it create community? Nouwen suggests that the powerful emotions of belonging and sharing, may risk creating a community that is inward and elitist. 'the Pentecostal movement creates a situation of oneness and togetherness, which makes the community highly self-centered and hinders the development of the autonomous Christian...'. 3) A Theological Perspective: here Nouwen is asking if the Pentecostal movement is reflecting the theological developments of Vatican II and suggests that it may not meet the new stress on incarnational theology. He concludes the article by stating: 'the new wave of Pentecostalism at Notre Dame University obviously answers a burning need in many students. It worries many who are concerned about the effects on the mental health of some...It places heavy responsibility on the leaders of the movement, and it disturbs many theologians' but it also offers a chance to come to a new realization of the crucial importance of the valid religious experience – as an authentic part of the Christian life'.

In this article Nouwen examines the growth or not, of religious maturity beginning with the new baby and ending with the adult man (sic). A. In the section covering the first five years the author identifies several stages: becoming aware that we are not the center of our world and that there are objective realities outside us that we cannot control; the formation of language in which we discover that our first words 'give us a mysterious power over things which can in later life be part of our use of religious prayer in a magical and not mature way; a 'third step out of the magical world is the formation of our conscience. This is formed in our contact with others and here the author relates some questions from Freud about our identification of God with our father. B. In the section covering school years 6 – 12 Nouwen identifies this time as one in which the child is exposed to a larger world, new and different values and new interests. The mature religion resulting from this he suggests will be 'integral in nature...flexible enough to integrate all new knowledge within its frame of reference. ... essential for a mature religion is the constant willingness to shift gears'. C. Here are discussed the adolescent years. These the author describes as a time of a more complicated inner and outer world with many conflicts; a time of facing and accepting or not, the shadow part of each person and the effect on the maturity of religious growth. D. This is the stage of the young adult. This is the time of leaving the family atmosphere and going away to study. 'As we enter college we take with us many religious concepts and ideas which seemed obvious, and which we never questioned. The question is, whether or not we have the courage to put question marks behind many things; if we can allow ourselves to doubt without losing all ground.' E. In this final section Nouwen discusses the adult man (sic). 'One facet of adulthood which has special significance for our religious attitude is that the mature adult mind is characterized by a unifying philosophy of life'. Without this unifying philosophy Nouwen suggests that boredom may characterize life. He describes boredom as 'the isolation of experience'...'every day seems to be just another day, indifferent, colorless and bleak'. Mature religion's unifying power fulfills here a creative function. Nouwen states finally, 'We started folded in our mother's womb, one with the world in which we lived. We slowly unfolded out of the magical unity into autonomous existence in which we discovered that we were not alone but stood in a constant dialogue with our surroundings.

F4-9-1-1542	Item - Homosexuality: prejudice or mental illness? November 29, 1967 1 p. of textual records Note [General] : Also available as an offprint with notation "File: Nouwen: Homosexuality" (located with item in file). This article has been hole punched. Scope and content: This item consists of a one page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: Homosexuality: Prejudice or Mental Illness? published in The National Catholic Reporter, 29 November, 1967, p. 8. The author is examining two ways of viewing the reality of male homosexuality in his time without, he says, wishing to decide 'who is right and who is wrong'. The first section discusses homosexuality as a problem of prejudice with three areas emphasized: A) Homosexuality and projection. Prejudice arises, Nouwen suggests, out of our fear of our own sexual uncertainty and 'feelings which we don't wish to acknowledge'. B) Homosexuality and the self-fulfilling prophecy. 'This theory of the self-fulfilling prophecy suggests, just like the theory of projection, that the major problem is one of prejudice. It is our false definition of what a homosexual is which causes the exact behavior which we despise.' C) Homosexuality in the bible and medieval Christianity. Nouwen outlines several biblical passages which are often used to 'try to prove that homosexuality is especially sinful, deserving of punishment or suffering...' He concludes this section by suggesting that these passages are usually misinterpreted. The second section of this article discusses homosexuality as a mental disorder. Nouwen asks here, 'to what degree do we have to consider homosexuality as a mental disorder with deeper roots than the feelings or ideas of the surrounding culture?' He then goes on to discuss two standpoints: 1) The psychoanalytic approach and 2) The phenomenological approach. In 1) he quotes from a letter of Sigmund Freud to a concerned mother to show Freud's kindness and sympathy and also discusses a study done by I. Bieber in 1962. In his discussion of 2) the phenomenological approach he uses material extensively from a study by Hans Giese in 1958 about the homosexual man. Two sub-sections here are: 1. How does the homosexual experience his own body? And 2) How does the homosexual experience himself in the world? This material is followed by a section entitled: Homosexuality and Pastoral Care in which he states: 'We believe that in our pastoral relationship with our fellow man we can try to understand the deep suffering of the homosexual in the light of God's revelation in Jesus Christ, and make him free for unconditional hope'. The final section of this article is entitled Practical Considerations. These are, Nouwen suggests, his own rather than scientific conclusions. He states here that, 'Our general attitude toward homosexuality should be free from anxiety and fear, not to speak of disgust and rejection. By a relaxed and understanding relationship to our homosexual fellow man, we might help him more than by an overly-moralistic concern which requires change as a condition for friendship'.

F4-9-1-1544	Item - Report on the possibility and desirability of love April 10, 1968      2 p. of textual records Note [General] : Also available as an offprint (located with item in file). This item is hole-punched on both sides and has 2 sets of felt pen marks on each side at the top. There is a head shot photo of a Sculpture by Auguste Rodin: The Kiss. Scope and content: This item consists of a two page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: On the possibility and desirability of love, published in The National Catholic Reporter, April 10. 1968, pp. 7-8. Nouwen begins his article by asking if love is possible at all. 'Is there a spark of misunderstanding in every intimate encounter, a painful experience of separateness in every attempt to unite, a fearful resistance in every act of surrender?' He then states that he intends to describe what he calls two main forms of existing: 1) a power or 'taking' form and 2) a forgiving form. He then finally intends to ask the crucial questions, 'Is love a utopian dream or a possibility within our reach?' There are three major headings in the article: 1) The taking form, 2) The forgiving form and 3) The possibility of love. In 1) Nouwen describes the taking form as a form of power. We objectify the other, we try to control, to manipulate vulnerabilities and weaknesses and classify and label others. 'This leaves us with the suspicion that the reality which we call "love" is nothing other than a blanket to cover the real fact that a man and a woman conquer each other in a long, subtle skirmish of taking movements in which one is always the winner who manipulates the other... we find ourselves doomed to the impossibility of love'. In 2) Nouwen describes the forgiving form as one of trust, openness and vulnerability. He suggests some characteristics of love. Love is truthful, tender and asks for total disarmament. He asks: 'Can we ever meet a fellow man without any protection? Reveal ourselves to him in our total vulnerability? In 3) The possibility of love, Nouwen attempts to answer these questions. He begins by noting that life is often a very painful fluctuation between the two desires to take and to forgive. 'And we have good reasons to be afraid. Love means openness, vulnerability and confession.' Again, Nouwen asks if real love is possible and answers by saying that it is not if 'the only real and final solution to life is death'. He then points to the person who he suggests has broken through the vicious circle and quotes from the prologue to the Gospel of John which speaks of Jesus breakthrough. 'Suddenly everything is converted into its opposite. Darkness into light, enslavement into freedom, death into life, taking into giving, destruction into creation and hatred into love'. He concludes by stating that 'the core of the Christian message is exactly this message of the possibility of transcending the taking form of our human existence.

F4-9-1-1545	Item - Anton T. Boisen and theology through living human documents      September 1968      15 p. of textual records Note [General] : Page 52 of photocopy of the article is missing; there are two "51" pages. First page of photocopy of article has been annotated in pen by Nouwen: "File Boisen Articles." Scope and content: This item consists of a 15 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: Anton T. Boisen and Theology through living human documents, published in Pastoral Psychology, Volume 19, No. 186, September 1968, p. 49 – 63. This issue of Pastoral Psychology is an Anton T. Boisen Memorial Issue and consists of 9 articles of which Henri Nouwen's is the last. In this article Nouwen looks at Boisen's important development of the use of the case study in the clinical training of theological students. Because this development of the case study arose out of Boisen's confrontation with his own psychotic breakdown in 1920, Nouwen focuses much of this article on the life of Boisen, the relationships that formed his direction from his study of languages, forestry and finally, the ministry. Nouwen states: "In a way, we can say that Boisen's own psychosis became the center of his identity...there he found his true vocation: the ministry to the mentally ill. There he found the main concepts of his most important publication, The Exploration of the Inner World and there he found the basis of his idea for the clinical training of theological students." The article has a number of headings: The Man, The Central Experience (his psychotic breakdown), The input (here Nouwen discusses some of the people who deeply influenced Boisen), The Outcome (here is discussed his development of the case method, Growth through Conflicts (the growth of the case method and evolutions which Boisen found difficult) and The Last Years (covers the years from Boisen's retirement until his death in 1965 at the age of 89).

This article was written shortly after the Second Vatican Council. In this article Nouwen is raising questions about the role of the pastor following the upheavals that are affecting the church. He states as the underlying concern, "Familiar channels through which we could function and reach thousands of men, women and children are leaking or completely broken down...we feel ourselves victims of a religious strip tease in which the critical modern man is insisting we remove one vestment of office after another..." In order to discuss what he feels can be the role of the priest in this new situation he uses two major headings: 1) How can the parish priest be an efficient and skillful pastor in our modern society? and 2) How can he remain a whole and integrated man in a rapidly changing world , which by its own nature is constantly challenging his own commitment? Under heading 1) Nouwen suggests that a pastor should be able to offer his parishioners three things a) a climate in which questions which challenge faith can be raised without fear b) a word given by the pastor to others which is uniquely tailored to the need of the individual: "a word directed to the highly individual needs of our suffering fellowman can create new life" and c) a home in a parish which provides "intimacy with a vital balance between closeness and distance" for the parishioner. Under heading 2) Nouwen provides three further headings a) Silence which is necessary for the priest to listen to God and his own deepest center b) Friendship. Here Nouwen suggests the need of the pastor to find friendship outside of the parish, most particularly in what he suggests should be a carefully formed group that lives together in the rectory and c) Insight. "By insight, we mean a sound perspective of the pastor on the significance of his own priesthood". Nouwen concludes the article by stating: "when a priest is well-prepared for his task and is in lasting communication with those he wants to serve, he can fulfill his task without fear. With a realistic confidence in his abilities, with a sense of inner harmony and most of all with trust in the value of his service, he can be a free witness for God, who can strengthen hope, fulfill love and make joy complete".

F4-9-1-1545b	Item - The death of Dr. King December 18, 1968 1 p. of textual records Note [General] : Published in The National Catholic Reporter 5, no. 9 (December 18, 1968): 4. File includes the newspaper section in which the article is printed. Annotation in unknown hand on page 1: "See page 4." Newspaper is two-hole punched. This article was published in a slightly revised form as, Were You There? The Death of Martin Luther King, Jr 1968, in Nouwen, Henri J M , The Road to Peace, ed. by John Dear, Maryknoll, N.Y., Orbis Books, 1998. Scope and content: This item consists of a one page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: The Death of Dr King, published in the National Catholic Reporter, December 18, 1968, p. 4. This article is a subjective reflection by Nouwen on the atmosphere, experience and people he encountered following the death of Dr Martin Luther King Jr. on April 4, 1968. Nouwen uses a number of headings : 1) The News – this begins in Chicago where he first hears of King's assassination. He describes the muted responses of the people he meets, 'Martin Luther King was dead, killed, assassinated. Everybody knew it but nobody wanted to know it'. 2) The Party – Here Nouwen describes the atmosphere at a party following his talk and notes particularly that most people are avoiding speaking of Dr King's death. 3) The Cool City – moves on to Topeka, Kansas where Nouwen reflects on the contrast between the 'slickness and artificiality' and 'the madness'. 'We were killing the prophets...Between the hollow voices of those who tried to advertise their latest product, it became clear that violence was cutting through the thresholds of restraint. Topeka seemed a cool and indifferent city'. 4) In Kansas City Nouwen visits a young man in prison for draft evasion. This young man speaks of the influence of Dr King on his life and the lives of his fellow prisoners and the atmosphere in the prison: 'when they heard that he was dead they doubled the guards. They did not understand that we were just crying, my Afro-American friends and me'. 5) The Cab Driver –this speaks of Nouwen's decision to change his plans and travel to Atlanta for the funeral. He describes his encounter at the airport with a cab driver who is also going. The cab driver shares with Nouwen: ' Dr King just tried to take Christ's words seriously. He realized he had to follow him all the way. What would happen if we really would do just that?' The remainder of the article describes the atmosphere in Atlanta: 'It was a special occasion in which happiness and joy merged with sadness and distress. Perhaps it had never been different for them.' Nouwen concludes this article by reflecting on his hope despite all the 'anger, grief and frustration'. 'I knew that out of my exhaustion a new faith could grow, a faith that it is possible to love'.

Dunne C.S.C., Macmillan Publishing. The authors begin the review by stating that 'John Dunne has written a great book. Certainly not an easy book but a personal, unique and insightful study worth entering as deeply as possible.' Nouwen and Wissink indicate that the subject of the book is 'how is God relevant to modern man in his search for meaning?' 'The autobiographies of men like Augustine, Luther, Pascal, Newman, Kierkegaard, Sartre, Camus and Jung serve as the main data for the quest...'. Nouwen and Wissink describe the book as: having a unique clinical and empirical touch; as having a high degree of insight...'which does not lead to a proud "now I know" ... but to a compassionate understanding that the night can pass into day and to some inkling of the turning point which lies ahead'. They go on to describe Dunne's method suggesting that 'A better title might be "From Time Out of Mind to Time Within Mind" because the whole book is based on the process of bringing to one's mind the time that is absent from the mind'. The reviewers then go on to describe what this means : 'Here we are meeting the great time history books are written about. We all live in it, but it is not the exclusive property of anybody, unless maybe of God, or death... what is the place of my life in this great time, in the death time or, hopefully, God's time?'. Nouwen and Wissink end the review by stating, 'Again, this is a great book. It offers more than a new idea, a new concept or a new insight. It offers a new perspective on life for modern man'.

John J. Weaver to Edward S. Skillin, Publisher, Commonweal. In this article the author's name is misspelled as 'Henry'. Scope and content: This item consists of an 8 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, Generation without Fathers: Christian Leadership of Tomorrow, published in Commonweal, June 12, 1970, pp 287 – 294. The article begins with an old Jewish story in which a young fugitive hiding in a village is handed over to soldiers by the Rabbi in order to save the people. The Rabbi is then informed that he should have met the young man and then he would have known he was handing over the Messiah. Nouwen then goes on to say as introduction, 'We are challenged to look into the eyes of the young man and woman of today running away from our cruel ways. Perhaps just that will be enough to prevent us from handing him over to the enemy and enable us to lead him out of his hidden place into the middle of his people to redeem them from their fears.' Nouwen then discusses what he sees are certain behavioral trends in the lives of those who are 'in the process of becoming'. Throughout the article Nouwen quotes both from a book by David Riesman entitled The Lonely Crowd and a paper by Jeffery K. Hadden in Psychology Today, October 1969. Nouwen heads the first section of this article The Man of Tomorrow. He describes these people as the children of the lonely crowd who exhibit three characteristics: Inwardness, Fatherlessness and Convulsiveness. Nouwen uses a definition of the inward generation from the work of Hadden: 'It is the generation which gives absolute priority to the personal and which tends in a remarkable way to withdraw into self'. In the subsection entitled Parents but no Fathers Nouwen states, 'We are facing a generation which has parents but no fathers, a generation in which everyone who claims authority ...is suspect from the very beginning'. In this generation the authority figures are ones peer group with all the tyranny that can involve. Convulsiveness is described as 'A fundamental unhappiness with their world, a strong desire to work for change, but a deep doubt that they will do better than their parents and a nearly complete lack of any kind of vision or perspective'. In the section of this article entitled Tomorrow's Leader, Nouwen outlines the characteristics of the Christian leader needed for today's youth. There are three characteristics suggested: 1. The leader as the articulator of the inner events, 2) The leader as a man of compassion and 3) The leader as a contemplative critic. Each of these sections is discussed fully and summarized at the end. Nouwen states, 'The Christian leader who not only is able to articulate the movements of the Spirit but also is able to contemplate his world with a compassionate but critical eye may expect that the convulsive generation will not choose death as the ultimate desperate form of protest, but instead the new life of which he has made visible the first hopeful sign.'

F4-9-1-1548	Item - Education to the ministry      June 15 - 18, 1972      9 p. of textual records Note [General] : Publishing information: Miller, Donald E., ed. June 15-18, 1972. Integrating the disciplines in theological education: Report of the twelfth biennial meeting of the Association for Professional Education for Ministry. Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota: Association for Professional Education for Ministry; pp. 8-16. Cover has notation: "File: Nouwen: Education to Ministry". Scope and content: This item is a 9 page copy of a paper given by Henri Nouwen entitled : Education to the Ministry included in Integrating the Disciplines in Theological Education; Report of the Twelfth Biennial Meeting of the Association of Professional Education for Ministry, June 15 – 18, 1972 Macalester College, St. Paul, Minnesota, p. 8 – 16. Nouwen indicates at the beginning of his paper that his intention is to 'present to you some ideas on ministry from the perspectives of hospitality in the hope that these can help us to see how the spiritual and professional life of the minister are related and what the implications of this relationship are for seminary formation'. Nouwen outlines his thoughts under three headings followed by his conclusion: 1) Ministry as Hospitality, 2) Ministry and Spirituality and 3) Education to the Ministry. In 1) Ministry as hospitality, Nouwen opens by saying that 'the call to ministry is the call to be a host to the many strangers passing by.' But he also points out that our attitudes toward strangers are ambivalent : sometimes hostile, sometimes hospitable and that the minister is to convert hostility into hospitality. It is 'the opening of an opportunity to others to find their God and their way'. In 2) Ministry and Spirituality Nouwen asks how the minister can remain faithful to hospitality to the stranger. He suggests that 'This will come to pass only when ministry is undergirded by spirituality,.. when the outer movement from hostility to hospitality is supported by an inner movement from property to poverty. Poverty means that my identity in the final analysis is not determined by what I can do, say or think, but by what God's Spirit can do, say and think in me'. This then allows the pastor to be open and not defensive and free to listen. In section 3) Education to Ministry, Nouwen outlines three general principles: 1) The first and most important ministerial task of every educator is to help the student face his own condition and that of the world realistically and without fear. 2) The second principle in education to the ministry is to help the student become available to himself, that is to become at home in his own house. 3) The third principle to guide us in education for the ministry is the principle of compassion. This latter principle Nouwen suggests, is powerful in a world which is 'on the edge of suicide' as a 'power for world peace in which the many barriers visible in prisons, hospitals, ghettos and war fields can slowly be taken away and in which this world can become again a hospitable place for man.'

F4-9-1-1549	Item - Nuclear man: in search for liberation
	November 1972      7 p. of textual records
	Note [General] : Item contains six black and white photographs of Nouwen, taken by Mary Callaway Logan, as he was presenting, including a photograph on the cover of the magazine.
	Scope and content: This item is a 7 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: Nuclear Man: In search for Liberation, included in Reflection, Volume 70, No. 1, the quarterly journal of Yale Divinity School and the Berkeley Divinity School, New Haven, Connecticut, 1972. Nouwen opens the article by describing nuclear man as someone who "does not look forward to the fulfillment of a great desire, nor does he expect that something great or important is going to happen. He looks into empty space and he is only sure that if there is anything worthwhile in life it must be here and now". Nouwen then states that the purpose of his article is "1. to come to a deeper understanding of our human predicament and 2) to hope to discover in the midst of our present ferment new ways to liberation and freedom". 1) In the first section Nouwen describes nuclear man as "one who realizes that his creative powers hold the potential for self-destruction and can be characterized by Robert Jay Lifton's 3 categories of a) 'historical dislocation' which include the realization that "symbols used by his parents cannot possibly have the unifying and integrating power which they have for people with a pre-nuclear mentality". There is a lack of continuity with the past. In b) 'Fragmented Ideology', there is a condition of "fast-shifting value systems" and nuclear man finds that he "does not believe in anything that is always and everywhere true and valid". In c) 'A search for new Immortality' Nouwen states, "When man is not able anymore to look beyond his own death and to establish for himself means to relate to what extends beyond the time and space of his own life, he loses his desire to create and with that the excitement of being human". 2) In the second section entitled Nuclear Man's way to Liberation Nouwen outlines "two main ways by which [nuclear man] tries to break out of his cocoon and fly: the mystical way and the revolutionary way". a) "The mystical way is the inward way. Man tries to find in the center of his own inwardness, a connection with the 'reality of the unseen', with 'the source of being', with 'the point of silence'. b) In The revolutionary Way Nouwen describes someone who "is tired of pruning the trees and clipping branches and wants to pull out the roots of a sick society". Nouwen concludes this article by asking "Is there a third way, which we can call a Christian way?". In this third way Nouwen describes Jesus as bringing together in himself both mystic and revolutionary and so "in this sense he remains also for nuclear man the way to liberation and freedom".

F4-9-1-1550	Item - Finding the friendly space June 1973 3 p. of textual records
	Note [General] : Published in The Episcopalian (June 1973): 8-10, 44. There is a small head shot photo, taken by Ron van den Bosch, of Nouwen on p. 10. It is from the same series of photos taken in Utrecht that appear in Album 3 and Album 11. A revised version of parts of this article were published as Hospitality in Monastic Studies, Number 10: Easter 1974. They were further published in Nouwen, Henri, 'Reaching Out', in the second section 'From Hostility to Hospitality', published by Doubleday &amp; Company, Inc., Garden City, New York, 1975. There are staple holes on the top of each page. Scope and content: This item is a 3 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'Find the Friendly Space: Post Easter probing into the heart of worship', published in 'The Episcopalian' June 1973, P. 9 – 10 &amp; 44. Nouwen opens the article by relating the story of the meeting of the two disciples on the road to Emmaus with the risen Jesus. Following the breaking of bread the two disciples recognize Jesus and return to Jerusalem with joy to tell the others. Nouwen states that this story is important because 'it helps us realize that liturgy is hospitality'. He then goes on to say that 'We need to look at our liturgical ministry as a way to create a friendly space'. After discussing what liturgy is not Nouwen states, ' liturgy is the indication of simple boundaries, a book, a table, a small piece of bread and a small cup of wine, within which the God of power and might can appear to us as...the God with us, the humble servant, the son of man. In the space created by these simple, basic human symbols, we can be touched by what is deeper than our own self-understanding and wider than our own life experience and can lift our hearts above the immediacy of our daily pains and sorrows.' Nouwen then goes on to look at this in more detail. He concludes by drawing attention to several things: He states that 'every liturgy must be highly flexible in terms of closeness and distance...that we especially today, should be open to a variety of liturgical celebrations'. All of this, he suggests requires 'flexible and sensitive priests'. He reminds the reader that 'Any celebration that does not move us outward is in constant danger of degenerating into a cozy, self-feeding, stuffy clique'.

F4-9-1-1551	Item - Hospitality April 14, 1974 28 p. of textual records
	Note [General] : Published in Monastic Studies, no. 10 (Easter 1974): 1-28. First page has notation "Voor Vader en Morder Harrie May'74". This article was published in an adapted form in Henri Nouwen, Reaching Out: The Three Movements of the Spiritual Life as Chapters 4 &amp; 5, Doubleday &amp; Company, Inc., Garden City, N.Y., 1975 Scope and content: This item is a 28 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'Hospitality' published in Monastic Studies, Number 10, by Mount Savior Monastery, Pine City, New York, Easter 1974. Nouwen has divided his article into 3 major divisions 1. From Hostility to Hospitality 2) Forms of Hospitality and 3) The Dynamics of Hospitality. Nouwen begins 1. By saying 'it is God who reveals to us the movement of our lives. It is not a movement from weakness to power, but a movement in which we can become less and less fearful and defensive, and more and more open to the other and his world. This movement allowing us to receive instead of to conquer is the movement from hostility to hospitality'. Nouwen follows with some examples of difficulties arising from the presence of hostility which prevents hospitality. He then describes hospitality as meaning 'primarily the creation of a space where the stranger can enter and become a friend instead of an enemy. It is not an attempt to change people, but to offer the free space where change can take place.' Nouwen discusses the difficulties in our society of creating this hospitable space and ends the section by saying 'To convert hostility into hospitality, to change the stranger from hostis to hospes, from enemy to friend, asks for a persistent attempt to create the free space where such a conversion can take place. In section 2. Nouwen indicates his intention as 'to show how different forms of service can be seen as hospitality. He identifies the forms of service as: teaching, preaching, counseling, organizing and liturgical celebration. In his conclusion to this section Nouwen says, '...they are all forms of ministry by which we create space for the stranger, space where he can enter into deeper contact with himself, his fellowman and his God'. In a short third section 3. The Dynamics of Hospitality, Nouwen speaks of 'receiving and confronting' by which he means by the latter, setting boundaries. The second heading is entitled 'participation in a certain plenitude'. Here, Nouwen states, 'The people who have had the most influence on me in my life...are men and women who never tried to convert me, change me, or make me do or not do certain things. ...They were people who were so much in touch with themselves, were so self-possessed and radiated so much inner freedom, that they became a point of orientation for my own search'. Nouwen begins this article by stating, ' Poverty makes a good host. This paradoxical statement needs some more explanation. In the context of hospitality I like to focus on two forms of poverty'. The two forms Nouwen describes as 1) Poverty of Mind and 2) Poverty of Heart. Nouwen focuses particularly on these two forms of poverty as they apply to ministry. With regard to poverty of mind Nouwen describes it by saying, ' Someone who is filled with ideas, concepts, opinions and convictions cannot be a good host. There is no inner space to listen, no openness to discover the gift of the other.' With regard to poverty of heart Nouwen says, ' Even more important than poverty of mind is poverty of heart. When our hearts are filled with prejudices, worries, jealousies, there is little room for the stranger...Poverty of heart creates community...' Nouwen concludes the article with the following ' Ministry, diakonia, service, care – they are all expressions for an attitude toward our neighbor in which we perceive life as a gift which we have received not to own but to share.'

See P6433 on Page 11 of Album 3 for a full-size version of the photo. Scope and content: This item is a half page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, ' A Time for Quiet, a Time for Action' published in the National Catholic Reporter, April 26, 1974, p.11. This article begins with a quotation from Mark 1:32 -39, "In the morning long before dawn he got up and left the house, and went off to a lonely place and prayed there". Nouwen then points to all the action in Jesus' life that surrounds these words and develops the idea of the importance to Jesus' fulfillment of his ministry of these moments alone and at prayer. " In the lonely place Jesus finds the courage to follow God's will and not his own, to speak God's words and not his own, to do God's work and not his own". He then states as the goal of this article, "I want to reflect on this lonely place in our own lives". Nouwen suggests that we tend to know that we too need a lonely place and silence and that without it there is a danger that our lives will be governed only by what we 'do'. He says, "practically all of us think about ourselves in terms of our contribution to life". In the remainder of the article Nouwen suggests that our attempts to find our identity in the busyness of the world is leading many people to depression and anxiety. Nouwen emphasizes the importance then of silence and solitude in human life: " Somewhere we know that without silence words lose their meaning, that without listening speaking no longer heals, that without distance closeness cannot cure. Somewhere we know that without a lonely place our actions quickly become empty gestures".

This article is a continuation of Nouwen's article from the National Catholic Reporter, April 26, 1974. He introduces this article by saying, " To live a Christian life means to live in the world without being of it. It is in solitude that this inner freedom can grow". The entire article is a development of his statement that " A life without a lonely place, that is, a life without a quiet center,, easily becomes destructive since by clinging to the results of our actions as our only way of self-identification we become possessive and defensive and tend to look at our fellow human beings more as enemies to be kept at a distance than as friends with whom we share the gifts of life". Nouwen discusses the importance to Jesus of his times of solitude and silence which fed his ministry and enabled him to face his death. The article concludes, " When you are somewhere able to create the lonely place in the middle of your actions and concerns, your successes or failures can slowly lose some of their powers over you."

Nouwen begins this article by stating, "A most painful thing to say is that intimate love does not take our loneliness away but protects it and converts it into solitude. Therefore intimacy is first of all a protecting intimacy allowing us to move from loneliness to solitude." Nouwen then goes on to give an example of a family whose mode of living is to avoid pain in their relationships. Nouwen suggests that "this world is full of lonely people trying hard to love each other without succeeding. The question is if this is not largely due to the fact that we are not able to face the pain of our loneliness". Nouwen concludes by stating, "Intimacy,..does not mean entering the other with an intruding curiosity or a hungry need for satisfaction. Intimacy touches gently, intimacy does not take, but gives, does not suffocate but lets grow, does not conquer and possess but sets free and keeps free."

Nouwen continues his emphasis on the difference between loneliness and solitude. The article begins with Nouwen saying, "Sometimes I wonder if the reason so many people ask support, advice and counsel from so many is not, for a large part, due to the fact that they have lost contact with their innermost self and are no longer able to listen to the voices speaking in the center of their solitude." Nouwen uses an extensive quote from R. M. Rilke to someone who asks about his vocation as a poet. Rilke emphasizes the need to look inward, to question whether there is necessity. Nouwen goes on to say "As long as I am trying to run away from my loneliness I am constantly looking for distractions with an inexhaustible need to be entertained and kept busy. Then I become a passive victim of a world asking for my idolizing attention...but when I have converted my loneliness into solitude, the world starts losing its claim on me..."

Renewing the theme of solitude from his previous articles (April and May) Nouwen states, "In solitude history becomes Kairos, which means history converts from a random collection of disconnected events into a constant opportunity for a change of heart and mind". He goes on to say in clarification, "When history becomes Kairos, I am called to search for hope even in the middle of crying cities, burning hospitals and desperate parents and children". Kairos, Nouwen suggests brings the depths of the heart into the actions of mind and hand; in Kairos which we touch in solitude, our actions are transformed. Nouwen concludes, "Every time in history that men and women have been able to respond to the manifestations of evil and death as to a Kairos, a historic opportunity, an inexhaustible source of generosity and new life has been opened, offering hope far beyond the limits of human prediction".

In this article Nouwen speaks of loneliness as a pervasive experience in modern life. He speaks first of his own loneliness and then states "Loneliness is one of the most universal human experiences but our contemporary western society has heightened the awareness of our loneliness to an unusual degree". He describes the loneliness people feel in crowded subways or at parties even though the images or words of welcome seem to imply warmth and closeness. "The language with which we are surrounded suggests anything but loneliness... it is a language which reveals the desire to be close and receptive to the stranger, but which in our society sadly fails to heal the pains of our loneliness, because the real pain is felt where we can hardly allow anyone to enter". Nouwen concludes "The roots of loneliness are very deep and cannot be touched by optimistic advertisement, substitute love images or social togetherness".

This article continues the focus on loneliness found in the article of May 31, 1974. Nouwen opens the article by stating, "Basic human loneliness threatens us and is so hard to face. Not seldom we will do every possible thing to avoid the confrontation with the experience of being alone and not seldom we are able to create the most ingenious devices to prevent ourselves from being reminded of this condition". Nouwen speaks of our culture's tendency to avoid loneliness; to fill all available time with activity. He suggests however that society also suffers because individuals also believe that they can take others' loneliness away. "When my loneliness drives me away from myself into the arms of my companions in life, I am in fact driving myself into excruciating relationships, tiring friendships and suffocating embraces". Nouwen goes on to develop the possibility that loneliness or unsatisfactory relationships can drive people into violence. He suggests at the conclusion that there must always be a private, 'mysterious' place in each person in order to develop community and healthy personal relationships.

He then asks how we can find the road to conversion, 'the conversion from loneliness into solitude. Instead of running away from my loneliness and trying to forget or deny it, I have to carefully protect it and turn it into a fruitful solitude'. Nouwen ends the article with a reference to his own struggles with this issue and concludes by stating, 'The few times however in which I followed the counsel of my severe masters and listen silently to my restless heart I started to sense that in the middle of my sadness there was joy, that in the middle of my fears there was peace, that in the middle of my greediness there was compassion and that indeed in the middle of my irking loneliness I could find the beginnings of a quiet solitude'

Nouwen has divided this article into two parts: 1) Marriage as the binding of each other's wounds and 2) Marriage as the healing of the suffering guest. Nouwen begins the first part by stating, 'What is man's wound?...Words such as alienation, separation, isolation and loneliness have been used to indicate man's wounded condition. I like to use the word loneliness in this context and try to understand our loneliness in the context of marriage'. Nouwen asks if 'we are not trying to avoid a confrontation with our basic human loneliness ' by looking for another to fill all the loneliness of human life. He suggests that a marriage relationship is healing when the 'love between husband and wife means a deep respect for the holy center where they are different, where they cannot reach each other, but must remain strangers'. He goes on to say that 'many marriages are ruined because neither partner was able to fulfill the hidden hope that the other would take his or her loneliness away'. In part 2, Nouwen writes of how marriage, 'can become a form of ministry not only to each other, but to strangers as well', but that this is most healing when the stranger can enter into the space on their own terms, where the relationship between the couple creates 'room for the other and...a friendly space where he can feel free to come and go, to be close and to take distance, to rest and to play, to talk and to be silent, to eat and to fast'. Nouwen suggests that in such a space each is free to recognize and own the loneliness and pain of the other which is a reality of human life. Nouwen concludes the article by saying, 'Marriage is a ministry because marriage is where we can bind each other's wounds with care and heal with our carefully protected wounds the many who pass us on their way. Loneliness is man's wound.'

Nouwen continues the theme of fruitful solitude which he began in previous columns of this paper. Nouwen states at the beginning, 'It is probably difficult if not impossible to move from loneliness to solitude without any form of withdrawal from a distracting world'. He speaks of monks and hermits who go into the wilderness seeking solitude but goes on to say, 'But the solitude which really counts is the solitude of the heart, an inner quality or attitude which does not depend on physical isolation'. Nouwen speaks of the difference in being present to another in loneliness or in solitude. In solitude, he suggests, we hear the other and respond. He also suggests that we all move back and forth between these poles even from hour to hour. Nouwen states 'Sometimes I wonder if the fact that so many people ask support, advice and counsel from so many other people is not, for a large part, a result of their having lost contact with their innermost self'. Nouwen concludes the article with a lengthy quote from Rainer Maria Rilke, Letters to a Young Poet.

Nouwen is continuing his focus on the importance of solitude for the spiritual development of the individual. He begins, 'By slowly converting my loneliness into a deep solitude, I create that precious space where I can distinguish the voice telling me about my inner necessity- that is, my vocation'. He follows this point by raising the question, 'How many people can claim their ideas, opinions and viewpoints as their own?'. He states that 'frequently, we are restlessly looking for answers, going from door to door, from book to book, or from school to school, without having really listened carefully to the questions'. Nouwen points out that our society tends to pull us away from fruitful solitude and encourages seeking answers instead of listening to the questions. He suggests that in solitude we can become present to ourselves and from this we become closer to others. 'In this solitude we encourage each other to enter into the silence of our innermost being and discover there the voice which calls us beyond the limits of human togetherness to a new communion.'

Nouwen begins the article by describing a visit to him from a former student in which they sat in companionable silence for a good portion of the visit. They each recognized the presence of Christ in the other and the student ended the time by saying ' From now on, wherever you go, or wherever I go, all the ground between us will be holy ground'. Nouwen then quotes Rainer Marie Rilke, ' Love consists in this, that two solitudes protect and border and salute each other'. Nouwen interprets this understanding in the following way, 'It made me see that the togetherness of friends and lovers can become moments in which we can enter into a common solitude which is not restricted by time and place'. He goes on to say, 'Only slowly I become aware of the possibility to make the human encounters of my life into moments by which my solitude grows and expands itself to embrace more people into the community of my life. It indeed is possible for all those with whom I stayed for a moment or a long time to become members of that community since by their encounter in love all the ground between us has indeed become holy ground and since those who leave can stay in the hospitable solitude of the heart'. Nouwen goes on to cite examples of the ways humans relate but which need not replace this fruitful solitude of the heart.

He begins by stating 'The movement from loneliness to solitude is not a movement of a growing withdrawal but instead a movement toward a deeper engagement on the burning issues of our time'. 'As long as I am trying to run away from my loneliness I am constantly looking for distraction...'. Nouwen points to the need to be 'fully aware of my world and very alert so all that is and happens can become part of my constant meditation and can be molded in the center of my solitude into a free and fearless response'. Nouwen begins this article by stating 'It is tragic to see how the religious sentiment of the West has become so individualized that concepts such as "a contrite heart" have come to refer only to personal experiences of guilt and the willingness to do penance for it'. Nouwen goes on to suggest that the great catastrophes of today do not become part of us and contrition for them becomes 'no more than a pious emotion'. He asks why the hurtful and corrupt actions of people in our society that are everyday in the newspaper don't 'crush our hearts and make us bow our head in an endless sorrow?...Shouldn't that bring us finally to a confession that we as a people have sinned and need forgiveness and healing?'. Nouwen then asks, 'how can I live a healthy and creative life when I am constantly reminded of the fate of the millions who are poor, sick, hungry and persecuted?' Nouwen admits he does not know the answer, but suggests that even though we may feel powerless to do anything we can accept that 'although the events of the day are out of my hands, they should never be out of my heart. I hope that, instead of bitterness, my life will yield to the wisdom that only from the heart a humble response can come forth'.

In this article Nouwen is writing about the value for parish clergy of note-making in their interactions with parishioners. Although Nouwen suggests that such note-making is rarely done he outlines in the article a number of reasons why it is valuable and offers some case-studies as evidence. Nouwen first identifies some reasons why there may be resistance in clergy to undertake note-making: 1) That the interactions are private and privileged, 2) That note-taking is a form of creativity which pastors may not see as being relevant to their work 3) That pastors may not see the relevance of what they do to the development of pastoral theology. Nouwen then discusses some values of note-making for pastors: 1) It is a professional task and one which, if the pastor is to be considered a professional among other professionals, must be done.. 'The pastor cannot seriously claim a place on the professional team if he does not have his case-record by which he presents his work with the patient for discussion, criticism and evaluation. 2) It is a form of self-supervision. Here Nouwen quotes Russell Dick, BD, that note writing 'is a check upon one's work; it is a clarifying and developing process; it relieves emotional strains for the writer.' Preceding the presentation of several case studies Nouwen states the following, ' One of the reasons it is so difficult to learn from experience is that the nature of the experience itself often remains obscure, ambiguous or vague. Sometimes the pastor feels happy after a visit, sometimes disappointed, sometimes sad, angry or depressed. In many ways the pastor senses vaguely that something went right or wrong, but cannot put a finger on it. Usually he does not stop to think or reflect but moves on to another experience allowing his feelings to drift into the background, unavailable as a potential source for learning. But if the pastor sits and writes the conversation as he or she remembers it, and tries to formulate personal observations of the situation and reactions to it, the cloud can vanish and the experience can become clear and visible'.

Nouwen begins this article by stating that 'when my response to the world remains hanging between my mind and my hands, it remains weak and superficial....Only when my mind has descended into my heart can I expect a lasting response welling up from my innermost self'. Nouwen speaks of the solitude of the heart as the place from which effective and meaningful actions flow. 'It is in the solitude of the heart that we can truly listen to the pains of the world because there we can recognize them as strange and unfamiliar pains but as pains which are indeed our own'. Nouwen suggests that it is from being in touch with our inner solitude that we can avoid self-righteousness and grow in compassion. Nouwen quotes several passages from the Trappist monk Thomas Merton, who speaks of the fruitfulness of solitude as a school for compassion. Nouwen concludes the article by stating 'The paradox indeed is that the beginning of healing is in the solidarity with the pain. And in our solution-oriented society it is more important than ever to realize that wanting to alleviate pain without sharing it is like wanting to save a child from a burning house without the risk of being hurt'.

In this article Nouwen begins by speaking of a human desire to 'stand out, be different, exceptional' and that we 'are slowly seduced into the illusion that our value is seated in those few qualities that make us different from all other people'. Nouwen goes on to say that maturity however, is to accept the reality of our human condition and our union and likeness to other human beings. Nouwen points to Jesus as the one who came 'like us' and then states 'And so it is God who reveals to us the movement of our life. It is not the movement from weakness to power, but the movement in which we can become less and less fearful and defensive and more and more open to the other...'. Nouwen points out the difficulty of this movement but suggests that the hostility and fear that we experience prevent us from becoming truly human. Nouwen concludes by suggesting that 'when we have become sensitive to the painful contours of our hostility, we might start identifying the lines of its opposite toward which we are called to move: hospitality'.

Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'If the first characteristic of the spiritual life is the continuing movement from loneliness to solitude, its second characteristic is the movement by which hostility can be converted in hospitality'. Nouwen suggests that if we meet others out of needy loneliness that will not create an open space of hospitality to help the other be who they should be. Nouwen states that he believes the biblical concept of hospitality 'might offer a new dimension to our understanding of a healing relationship and the formation of a recreating community'. Hospitality creates 'not a fearful emptiness, but a friendly emptiness where strangers can enter and discover themselves as created free...'.

Nouwen begins this article by stating, 'A most painful thing to say is that intimate love does not take our loneliness away but protects it and converts it into solitude. Therefore intimacy is first of all a protecting intimacy allowing us to move from loneliness to solitude.' Nouwen then goes on to give an example of a family whose mode of living is to avoid pain in their relationships. Nouwen suggests that 'this world is full of lonely people trying hard to love each other without succeeding. The question is if this is not largely due to the fact that we are not able to face the pain of our loneliness'. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'Intimacy,..does not mean entering the other with an intruding curiosity or a hungry need for satisfaction. Intimacy touches gently, intimacy does not take, but gives, does not suffocate but lets grow, does not conquer and possess but sets free and keeps free.'

He says 'Being busy, active and on the move has nearly become part of our constitution'. Nouwen goes on to state 'this is why silence is such a difficult task'. He suggests that occupation and preoccupation are our 'fearful ways to keep things the same'... 'we hold on to the familiar life items which we have collected in the past'. Nouwen uses as an example of this a story by Carlos Castaneda and the story of Jesus' exhortation that we should 'not worry ... your heavenly father knows what you need'. Nouwen concludes by saying, 'Conversion is an inner event that cannot be planned or organized, but needs to develop from within. Just as you cannot force a plant to grow, but can take away the weeds and stones which prevent its development, so you can... offer the space where such a conversion can take place'.

Nouwen begins the article by stating his purpose: 'I would like to show how different forms of service can be seen as hospitality'. Nouwen then goes to speak about teaching as a form of ministry. Nouwen suggests that 'Practically every student perceives his education as an endless row of obligations to be fulfilled... In such a climate it is not so surprising that an enormous resistance to learning develops and that much real mental and emotional development is inhibited by an education situation in which students perceive their teachers more as demanding bosses than as guides in their search for knowledge and understanding'. Nouwen suggests that what is needed is for there to be a space created 'where students and teachers can enter into a fearless communication with each other and allow their respective life experiences to be their primary and most valuable source of growth and maturation'. Nouwen states that he sees teaching also as a form of hospitality and that a most important task of the teacher is to create 'a fearless space' where questions can be asked and explored.

October 18, 1974. In this article Nouwen looks at teaching as an activity of hospitality and outlines two important tasks: 1) Revealing and 2) Affirmation. The teacher's task is to 'reveal to students that they have something to offer...to help them see not that they still have a lot to learn, but that their own life experiences, their own insights and convictions, their own intuitions and formulations are worth serious attention'. Nouwen goes on to speak of affirmation, 'what is revealed as good, worthwhile, as a new contribution, needs affirmation'. Nouwen states that it especially in religious education that revelation and affirmation are of great importance. He suggests that students find it difficult to care for religious instruction when their own experiences are not touched. 'Why should we speak about the way to someone who does not realize there are many roads? How can people desire the truth when they don't even know they have any questions?'

Nouwen identifies preaching as a common ministerial task which has, he suggests, come to have many negative connotations. Nouwen describes preaching in many ways in this article: removing rocks so good seed can find root; taking away leaves so the path is visible; ploughing ground so that the rain can soak it. He states, 'Preaching in this sense means creating the space where the word can be received'. Nouwen describes preaching as 'a very hard and often painful task because it requires that the preacher be able to feel and speak to the "soul" of the community'. And in a pain-avoiding society, it takes courage to feel into experiences which hurt, to articulate emotions which prefer to remain hidden and to give names to behavior which wants to remain unmentioned'. Nouwen concludes the article by saying, '...we must be aware that Christianity is not an ideology but the revelation of the living Christ, with whom a personal relationship is possible. The vocation of the preacher therefore, is ...to set apart a moment and a place where the still voice can be heard..'

He says: 'We all want the resurrection without the cross, healing without pains, growth without crisis. We can even say that much of the way we build a culture is to avoid pain, to keep distance from it, and not to look at it'. Nouwen goes on to say that Jesus 'did not come take our pains away. The way from Palm Sunday to Easter Sunday is the patient way, the suffering way...showing our pains as the gateway to God. Nouwen concludes by stating:' When we understand the many small deaths, the many small farewells as God's work, then slowly we are able to see our life as the continuing invitation to become more and more free for him whose heart is greater than ours and who came to show us the patient way to Easter Sunday'.

The files have been combined into item 1576. Scope and content: This item is a series of excerpts from the works of Henri Nouwen published in: 'Renew, Season IV, Our Lady of Providence, no earlier than 1976, pp. 9 – 10, 12 – 13, 16. The first series of excerpts entitled 'The Cost of Discipleship' from Nouwen, Henri, With Open Hands, outlines the dangers of being a disciple who speaks truth. 'You are Christians only so long as you look forward to a new world, so long as you constantly pose critical questions to the society you live in...so long as you stay unsatisfied with the status quo...The excerpt goes on to suggest that the one who lives like this, as Jesus lived, will be persecuted but will bring new life. The second series of excerpts from Nouwen, Henri, Out of Solitude is entitled, 'Healing of the Disciple'. In this section the focus of the excerpts is on the importance of curing and caring. Nouwen suggests that curing without caring, without entering the pain of the other 'is as dehumanizing as a gift given with a cold heart'. The third series of excerpts is also from Out of Solitude and is entitled, 'Mission of the Disciple'. The first excerpt begins 'Every human being has a great, yet often unknown gift to care, to be compassionate, to become present to the other, to listen, to hear and to receive'. Nouwen goes on to suggest that we do not use these gifts to their fullest because we avoid the vulnerability involved. The item concludes with Nouwen stating, 'By honest recognition and confession of our human sameness we can participate in the care of God who came, not to the powerful but powerless, not to be different but the same, not to take our pain away but to share it. Through this participation we can open our hearts to each other and form a new community'.

Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'Prayer reveals to us the real nature of things. It is the affirmation of life not as a possession to be grabbed and hoarded but as a gift to be shared'. Nouwen then goes on to speak of the difference between living as if people, things, ideas are to be grabbed and possessed or as if these things are received as a gift to be shared. He suggests that through prayer the latter becomes a reality to the life of the person who prays. Nouwen concludes the article in the following way, 'Through prayer we discover that people are more than their character – that they are persons in the sense of per sonare - sounding through. When we become personas to each other, we sound through a peace greater than we ourselves can make and a love deeper and wider than we ourselves can contain. When we become persons we do indeed become transparent to each other and the Lord can speak through us to us'.

In this article Nouwen uses the letters to his brother Theo and the paintings of the Dutch painter, Vincent Van Gogh to write of the expression of compassion in a human life. Nouwen states as the aspects of compassion he wishes to look at in the following way: 'When we read Vincent's letters and contemplate his paintings and drawings, three aspects of compassion come into focus: solidarity, consolation and comfort'. He then goes on with regard to these aspects to say, 'When we say, "Blessed are the compassionate," we do so because the compassionate manifest their human solidarity by crying out with those who suffer. They console by feeling deeply the wounds of life, and they offer comfort by pointing beyond the human pains to glimpses of strength and hope. 1) Solidarity: Nouwen suggests that although a sense of human solidarity might seem obvious that capacity has receded in our society. But he describes Vincent's sense of it: 'He realized that the road to human solidarity is painful and lined by weeping willows, but once Vincent found his aim in life, nothing, absolutely nothing, could hold him back'. 2) Consolation: Nouwen begins this aspect 'when we have given up our desire to be different and have recognized our intimate solidarity with the human condition, then consolation can manifest itself. In Vincent Van Gogh, Nouwen sees consolation growing out of the artists desire to 'come in touch with the heart of life as he saw it in the poor of spirit... for him, to draw meant to draw out of his fellow human beings that which binds them together'. Nouwen concludes this section by stating, 'Consolation indeed asks for the sincere struggle to reach into the center of human brokenness; out of its common depths compassion can be expressed'. 3) Comfort: 'Comfort...is the great human gift that creates community. Those who come together in mutual vulnerability are bound together by a new strength that makes them into one body'. Nouwen goes on to describe how Van Gogh especially in his later life tried to comfort by 'drawing out of the dirtiest corners of life a ray of light'. Van Gogh's own suffering of loneliness, obscurity and mental anguish, did not obscure the reality that 'it is the sun that has made Vincent famous'.

In this article Nouwen is discussing the necessity of solitude in family life allowing each member to have the space to grow. "...the family is a special witness to the general Christian and human vocation to live a life in which solitude leads to intimacy and intimacy to solitude'. Nouwen states that we live in a world in which what we 'do' defines who we are and therefore leads us to believe that we must be constantly occupied. Nouwen then states that 'the first gift of family members to each other is the gift of solitude, in which they can discover their real selves'. He states that allowing solitude for a married couple increases the intimacy between them and between and with their children. Nouwen concluded, 'In their solitude and intimacy, they evoke a love which transcends the limits of human togetherness; they evoke a divine love of which they have become visible witnesses'. It is part one of a two-part article. This article is an excerpt from: Nouwen, Henri: Genesee Diary, Doubleday &amp; Co., 1976. Nouwen begins by stating that 'My desire to live for seven months in a Trappist monastery, not as a guest but as a monk, did not develop overnight'. The remainder of the article describes some of his struggles and insights as he lived the life of a monk. Nouwen states that he had been looking for someone to help him find direction in his life. He then met Father John Eudes Bamberger at the monastery of Our Lady of Gethsemani in Kentucky in whom he says he found what he had been looking for: 'He listened to me with care and real interest, but he also spoke with deep conviction and a clear vision...'. Three years later Nouwen went to the Abbey of the Genesee where Bamberger had become Abbot. It is the experience of the seven months in which lived as a monk at this Abbey which is the focus of this article and of the book from which it is taken. Nouwen describes his struggle with the rhythms and work of the monastic life; his struggle understanding monastic concepts of obedience and his own depression that followed his first month. Nouwen then outlines some of the areas in which he feels is learning: 1) Wanting to be different- Nouwen describes his lifelong desire to be thought different and his growing discovery that in the monastery one is to be unnoticed, not special, and in this 'The mystery of God's love is that in this sameness, we discover our uniqueness'. 2) Sacred Rhythm – 'One of the things a monastery like this does for you is give a new rhythm, a sacred rhythm' and in this, Nouwen rediscovers the Saints. 3) Mary – in the monastery Nouwen rediscovers his devotion to Mary that was part of his family life. 4) Love – In his time in this monastery Nouwen says he struggled with the sense that his experience of love had been 'limited, imperfect and weak'. Nouwen goes on to say 'I am beginning to experience that an unconditional, total love of God makes a very articulate, alert and attentive love for the neighbor possible'.

This is part two of a two part article (see Sign, April 1976). It is an excerpt from, Nouwen, Henri: The Genesee Diary, Report from a Trappist Monastery. In this article Nouwen continues to reflect on his 7 month stay at the Abbey of the Genesee in New York State. Nouwen reflects on a number of aspects of his experience under some of the following headings: 1) Boring Work. Nouwen finds the boredom of the manual labor he is given each day makes him feel angry and frustrated. Under the guidance of the Abbot, he begins to discover that 'manual work, indeed, unmasks my illusions, it shows how I am constantly looking for interesting, exciting, distracting activities to keep my mind away from the confrontation with my nakedness, powerlessness, mortality'. 2) Silence. In this section Nouwen describes his growing awareness of the ambiguous feelings that arise in him when he talks too much and does not seek silence. 3) Scheduled Prayer. In seeking a deep prayer life for his return to his busy work, Nouwen is advised by the Abbot to have a scheduled time of prayer daily that can never be broken without permission of his spiritual advisor. 4) Monastic Capitalism. Nouwen discusses in this section his experience of the marketing wisdom of the monks in the selling of their bread. 5) Center of the world. Abbot Eudes describes the monastery as 'the center of the world'. Nouwen reflects that 'Insofar as the monastery is the place where the presence of God in the world is most explicitly manifest and brought to consciousness, it is indeed the center of the world'. 6) Total Commitment. Nouwen asks the Abbot about total commitment because 'I have had a glimpse of the reality of being unconditionally committed to Christ in a total surrender to him. In that glimpse, I also saw how divided I still am, how hesitantly I commit myself, with what reluctance I surrender'. 7) Thanksgiving. Nouwen has been asked to speak to the community about his experience with them. He speaks in terms of The Lord, the world, the brethren, and the saints and what he has learned of each. 8) Epilogue. Nouwen writes the epilogue more than 6 months after he has left the Abbey and reflects on how little he feels the experience has changed him. However, he sees it as having given him strength to support him in 'the Garden of Gethsemane and the long, dark night of life'.

He then asks if it is not possible also to speak about compassion with God which he sees as the basis for our compassion with others. Nouwen sees the dynamic of compassion with God as rooted in Jesus. 'The great mystery of the spiritual life is that it is a life of union with God. But this union with God is a union through Jesus Christ who suffered all the pains of the world and carried these pains with him into his intimacy with the Father'. Nouwen goes on to say that 'We cannot carry the pains of our world in our own mind but we can carry [them] in the mind of Jesus Christ'. Nouwen concludes the article by stating 'Our hearts and minds are too small to carry the burdens of the world but in God's mind and heart there is room for all that hurts'.

This article which is an excerpt from Nouwen's book 'Genesee Diary' is a short reflection on his personal response to the political upheaval in Chile and the torture of many there. Nouwen begins by stating that he has read reports on the crisis which he finds 'so disturbing, so overwhelming in their description of terror, that I could hardly sleep last night'. He speaks of his struggle to accept that this goes on while he is living quietly at the monastery but reflects that his understanding of some of the psalms which are part of the daily prayer there, help him with this struggle. He wonders if he is feeling compassion for the victims or more that he is feeling mostly anger at the perpetrators. 'Maybe it is realistic to recognize these feelings and be thankful that the psalms give me a chance to express them even in the intimacy of prayer. Maybe these feelings have to be led directly to the center of my relationship with my God who is "slow to anger".'

Scope and content:
This item is a 6 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, Solitude and Intimacy in the Family, published in a.d. Correspondence: Catholic Reflections on Catholic Life, Vol. 13, No. 3, July 31, 1976. This article consists of excerpts from two talks given by Nouwen. Nouwen states early in the article, 'We live in a society in which loneliness has become one of the most painful human wounds. Growing competition and rivalry, pervading human life from birth to death have created a new acute awareness of man's isolation'. Nouwen suggests that loneliness however, is an important part of our development as human beings and that attempts to do away with it, especially within marriage and family are not helpful to growth. 'Maybe we have to say that a growing maturity in marriage means a growing regard for that deep place where man is totally alone and cannot be understood and touched, and a growing reverence for the mystery in each other which can never be fully grasped'. Nouwen sees that in marriage the husband and wife 'are called to be ministers to each other, binding each other's wounds of loneliness.' This will make it possible he suggests, to protect the private space that each needs, and will create a growth of true intimacy. 'Then we become lovers who are not trying to fulfill each other, but who want to sound through to each other the all-fulfilling love which embraces us all'. Nouwen then speaks of the family which respects in the children the need also for space to be themselves, as gifts not possessions. This respect and true intimacy then leave room for hospitality in its true sense to others outside the family. Nouwen then discusses what he calls, receptive solitude, 'therefore the first gift of family members to one another is the gift of solitude in which they can discover their real selves'. Nouwen concludes the article by stating, 'Thus, marriage can indeed be a witness to the living truth that the wound which causes us to suffer now will be revealed to us as the place where God's new creation took its first shape'.

This item is a 2 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: Called to be Hosts, published in Faith/At/Work, September, 1976, p 30-31. Nouwen begins the article by stating 'The call to ministry is the call to be a host to the many strangers passing by. In this world full of strangers...we search for a hospitable place, where life can be found'. Nouwen speaks then of our ambivalent feelings towards the stranger of both fear and attraction and suggests that 'during the last years strangers have become more subject to hostility than to hospitality'. Nouwen then goes on to speak of the way in which a minister is to offer healing hospitality to the stranger. He speaks of the need to offer a space where the stranger can grow to be himself. 'This will come to pass only when ministry is undergirded by spirituality, that is, when the outer movement from hostility to hospitality is supported by an inner movement from property to poverty. Poverty means that my identity in the final analysis is not determined by what I can do or think, but by what God's Spirit can do, say, and think in me.' Nouwen concludes, 'When poverty enables us to create a friendly space for the stranger and to convert hostility into hospitality, then the stranger might be willing to show his real face'.

Nouwen begins this article by making reference to the monk, Thomas Merton who read no newspapers, nor watched television, nor listened to the radio but who had a strong sense of solidarity with humanity. Nouwen quotes Merton ' My first duty is to start to live as a member of a human race that is no more and no less ridiculous than I am myself'. This, Nouwen suggests, lead Merton to compassion. 'It was because of this compassionate solidarity that Merton was able to speak out and to offer criticism...to distinguish illusions from reality'. Nouwen then speaks about our modern exposure daily to images and descriptions of deep human suffering that we can do nothing about. He says, ' I am wondering, more and more, if day-to-day confrontation with human suffering with which identification is impossible does not, in fact, create more anger than love and more disgust than compassion'. He then asks, 'How can I become a compassionate person?'. Nouwen indicates that most of Merton's information came from personal sources, letters, from individuals rather than collectivities. "In these letters Merton saw the world with its pains and joys; these letters brought him in contact with a living community of people who had real faces, real tears, and real smiles'. Nouwen concludes the article 'A compassionate person has an eye for small things and is able to trust in the simple response. The great temptation is to make things so complex that any response seems inadequate and meaningless'.
F4-9-1-1590	Item - Living the questions: the spirituality of the religion teacher Fall 1976 8 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is an 8 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, ' Living the Questions: The Spirituality of the Religion Teacher', published in the Union Seminary Quarterly Review, Volume XXXII, Number 1, Fall 1976 by Union Theological Seminary, New York. Nouwen outlines the purpose of this article, " I would like to explore the spirituality of the teacher by focusing on three aspects of teaching: 1) Teaching as the affirmation of the student's search; 2) Teaching as the giving of oneself to the student; and 3) Teaching as the disclosure of the Lord in the relationship between teacher and student.' In 1) Nouwen suggests that the role of the teacher of religion is 'not to offer information, advice or even guidance but to allow others to come into touch with their own struggles, pains, doubts and insecurities – in short, to affirm their lives as a quest'. In 2) Here, Nouwen suggests that the teacher must be both vulnerable and a witness. With regard to allowing the teacher to be vulnerable he says, 'Who wants to be vulnerable and say with confidence," I don't know!'. To be a religion teacher calls for the courage to enter with the student into the common search.' The teacher shares with the students their common searching humanity. In 3) Nouwen says, 'To be a teacher is to disclose through your own person this mystery of God... To disclose the questioning Lord, therefore, requires the humble confession of our basic human ignorance and powerlessness'. Nouwen concludes by pointing out that for the reasons he has outlined, the teacher of religion may not be very popular in a success-oriented world. Raising more questions than offering answers is vital but, he suggests, a few students may listen to the voice of God and be able to follow it.

Nouwen begins the article with the example of the monk Thomas Merton's growth in compassion as he lived his life in the monastery. Though unrecognized by Merton until he began teaching student monks, 'he realized that they were sent to him to lead him away from his own paralyzing fear into a new and creative relationship with others. This sequence of events in Merton's life reveals something of the mysterious way in which compassion belongs to the core of any type of community life'. Nouwen describes compassion as a discovery and fellowship with 'the other' and it is this which helps creates community. Nouwen suggests however, that we should not be sentimental about people who are compassionate and points to a number of examples of people who were both compassionate and yet in some sense, difficult: Van Gogh, J.H. Newman, Dag Hammarskjold, Merton. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'The Christian community is a community in which people are sounding through to each other the great love of God which binds them together. The gift of compassion makes it possible for us to recognize this love in each other and bring it to the forefront'.

This article is an excerpt from: Nouwen, Henri, 'The Genesee Diary, Image Books, Doubleday &amp; Co., Garden City, New York, 1976. Nouwen begins this article by describing his distracted and restless life and his lack of time for prayer and quiet which leads him to spend seven months living the monastic life at the Abbey of the Genesee in upstate New York. He speaks of his desire to be different, sensational but discovers that 'in recent years, I have become increasingly aware of the dangerous possibility of making the word of God sensational'. During his time at the monastery he asks the Abbot, John Eudes Bamberger, how, when he returns to his busy life, he can develop a deep prayer life. Bamberger's answer is, he says, simple: 'The only solution is a prayer schedule that you will never break without consulting your spiritual director'. This schedule will include setting a firm time which cannot be changed and to remain at prayer however 'useless' this time appears to be. Nouwen concludes by suggesting that though he is distracted and unclear what his prayer may be doing for him, in retrospect he senses that he is growing.

This is an excerpt from, Nouwen, Henri: The Genesee Diary, Image Books, Doubleday &amp; Co., Inc., Garden City, N.Y. 1976. In this article Nouwen writes about his struggles with his sense of self-worth and being lovable which he experiences in the monastery. Nouwen opens the article by stating, 'My first inclination has been, and in many ways still is, to connect love with something special in me that makes me lovable'. Nouwen struggles with his feeling that if someone is friendly and loving towards him but equally so with others, then there must be something false about that individual's love. Nouwen goes on to state, 'It is important for me to realize how limited, imperfect and weak my understanding of love has been...It seems that the monks know the answer: "You must love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind"' . As Nouwen works through this dilemma for himself he concludes that, 'As long as I am plagued by doubts about my self-worth, I keep looking for gratification from people around me and yield quickly to any type of pain, mental or physical. But when I can slowly detach myself from this need for human affirmation and discover that it is the relationship with the Lord that I find my true self, an unconditional surrender to him becomes not only possible but even the only desire, and pain inflicted by people will not touch me in the center'. With the help of the Abbot he learns that this will come about as he meditates with a commitment to listening truly to God.

Nouwen opens with a quote from Thomas Merton describing his monastery as 'a place in which I disappear from the world as an object of interest in order to be everywhere in it by hiddenness and compassion. To exist everywhere, I have to be nowhere'. Nouwen suggests the word 'displacement' for his movement towards compassion. He states that compassion is a gift but that it requires discipline. He states, 'The discipline of displacement is a discipline by which we unmask the illusion of "having it put together in a special way" and get in touch with our reality, which is that we are pilgrims on the way, broken people in search of healing, unfulfilled people looking for the One who can fulfill us, sinners asking for grace'. Nouwen concludes by suggesting the necessity of two things: community that leads to prayer and prayer that leads to community.

F4-9-1-1595	Item - The minister as the wounded healer: pastoral care and counseling November - December 1976 7 p. of textual records Note [General] : This item contains excerpts from: Nouwen, Henri, The Wounded Healer, Image Books, Doubleday, New York, 1972. Scope and content: This item is a 6 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'The Minister as the Wounded Healer' published in Pulpit Digest, November-December 1976. Nouwen's first heading in this article is 'The Wounded Minister' and he opens by stating, 'This means that he who wants to announce the liberation is not just called to care for his own wounds but even to make them into the main source of his healing power'. Nouwen asks which wounds these might be and suggests the words alienation, separation, isolation and loneliness. He finds the word 'loneliness is closest to our immediate experience and therefore most fit to make us aware of our broken condition'. Nouwen finds loneliness to be one of modern humanity's deepest wounds, one which we make painful attempts to break through. However, he goes on to say 'the Christian way of life is not to take away our loneliness but to protect and to cherish it as a precious gift'. Nouwen believes that the minister's gift is to embrace this loneliness in his own life and use it to share his own broken humanity with those he serves. The next heading entitled, 'The Healing Minister' asks the question, 'how does healing take place?' Nouwen speaks here of care and compassion but develops the theme of hospitality. 'Hospitality is the virtue which allows man to speak through the narrowness of his own fears and to open his house for the stranger with the intuition that salvation comes to us in the form of a tired traveler'. In this way the minister who has come to terms with his own loneliness can offer a healing hospitality. Nouwen concludes by stating 'No minister can save anyone. He can only offer himself as a guide to fearful people...because a shared pain is no longer paralyzing but mobilizing when it is understood as a way to liberation'.

This article is an excerpt from: Henri Nouwen, The Living Reminder: Service and Prayer in Memory of Jesus, The Anglican Book Centre, Toronto, 1977. There are two headings in this article: 1) The Guidance and 2) The Guiding. In 1) Nouwen begins by stating 'Good memories offer good guidance...Our hope is built on our memories. Without memories, there are no expectations'. Nouwen then goes on to explain that what he calls 'guiding memories', which may not be conscious are powerful in our daily living. He suggests that the great prophets including Jesus, called upon these memories to recall the people to their goal. In part 2) Nouwen asks 'How do ministers, as living memories of Jesus Christ, guide their people in the concrete circumstances of everyday life?' He offers two forms of guidance: confronting and inspiring. The minister confronts by reminding people of the temptation to complacency and stifling narrowing down of the original vision. The minister inspires the people by 'a recapturing the original vision, a going back to the point from which the great inspiration came'.

Nouwen is reviewing a book entitled, 'Genocide in Paraguay', edited by Richard Arens, Temple University Press. Nouwen begins the review by asking if 'our age will not be called the Age of Mass Murders and Genocide'. Nouwen states that 'The main contribution [in this book] is the article by Mark Munzel: 'In a nonsensationalist , carefully documented and deeply engaging way, Munzel describes how this peaceful hunting and food-gathering people are killed or captured because their land has recently jumped in value for forestry and ranching companies'. He goes on to describe what has happened to the Ache Indian people and the involvement of Americans. He cites in conclusion from the epilogue by Elie Wiesel, himself a survivor of holocaust, 'After having read these testimonies, we know. Henceforth we shall be responsible. And accomplices.'
F4-9-1-1598	Item - Compassion: the core of spiritual leadership March 1977 6 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 6 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'Compassion, The Core of Spiritual Leadership', published in Occasional Papers by the Institute for Ecumenical and Cultural Research, Collegeville, Minnesota, March 1977, No. 2. Nouwen begins the article by stating that his discussion of compassion as the core of spiritual leadership can be looked at in three areas: 1) The phenomenology of compassion. How does compassion manifest itself? Answer: In solidarity. 2) The asceticism of compassion. How is compassion disciplined? By voluntary displacement. 3) The theology of compassion. How is compassion lived out in the light of the gospel? In discipleship. Nouwen then goes on to discuss each of these areas. 1) Solidarity. 'Solidarity, as the manifestation of compassion, does not mean resignation to the sad fact that we are about the same as other human beings, but it means desire to participate in our human sameness as fully and deeply as possible'. Nouwen discusses the implications of solidarity for the spiritual leader and states ' Not critical observation, but compassionate participation; that is the vital source of all authority.' He suggests Jesus as the divine manifestation of compassionate authority. 2) Displacement. Nouwen identifies compassion as a gift rather than something that can be learned. Nouwen suggests that displacement is the discipline of compassion and uses a dictionary definition to define it: 'to move or to shift from the ordinary or proper place'. In the concrete this means, according to Nouwen, moving away from 'what is ordinary and proper' and getting in touch with our own 'inner brokenness as well as with the brokenness of our fellow human beings'. He concludes the section by stating, ' And so, the discipline of displacement is the mysterious way by which the expression of compassionate solidarity becomes possible. 3) Discipleship. Nouwen's principle point here is described by him, 'Every human attempt to be compassionate independent of Christ is doomed to failure. The discipline of compassion only makes sense as an expression of discipleship'. He further clarifies, ' In Christ we can do a little thing while doing much, we can show care without being crushed and we can face the pains of the world without becoming gloomy, depressed or doomsday prophets'. Nouwen concludes the article by stating that the school in which all this is taught is the school of prayer.

Reprinted from: Faith at Work. Scope and content: This item is a 4 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: Spirituality and the Family, published in Church Educator Supplement, by Educational Ministries, Inc. 1406 Westwood, Lakewood, Ohio, June 1977. The preface states that the article was used as the basis for a Christian Family Retreat, as a discussion starter in Christian growth groups, as a tool in premarital counseling and as the premise for a series of parenting classes. Nouwen introduces the article with a quote from St Paul's letter to the Thessalonians, 'Never try to suppress the Spirit: pray constantly and be joyful at all times. Be patient with everyone and think what is good for each other'. The article is divided into two sections. 1) The Vocation of Solitude. He outlines the need in every family for a time and place of solitude for each member. It is in this solitude that each one learns that they are not what they do but 'what we are given... in solitude we find the space in which God can reveal himself to us as the great lover who made us and remade us.' 2) The Vocation to Intimacy. Nouwen begins by stating, 'out of the gift of solitude the gift of intimacy becomes possible'. If intimacy is not born out of fruitful solitude he suggests, then there is a fearful loneliness and various forms of violence. 'Intimacy born out of solitude creates not only a space where partners can freely dance, but also a space for others, most of all children. The intimacy of marriage is the intimacy in which children can enter, grow and develop, and from which they can depart without feelings of guilt.' In conclusion he suggests that all of this also leads to a hospitality which can welcome others in love.
F4-9-1-1600	Item - 'What do you know by heart?': learning spirituality August 1977 3 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 3 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, "'What do you know by heart?': Learning Spirituality", published in Sojourners, August , 1977, pp. 14 – 16. Nouwen begins this article outlining his theme by using a story which he says 'expresses in a simple but powerful way the importance of spiritual formation in theological education'. Nouwen then goes on to speak of the inadequacy in theological studies of 'head' knowledge. What is also needed he says is 'heart' knowledge; spiritual formation. Nouwen suggests three themes which he says are important in the context of theological education: Lectio Divina, silence and guidance. By Lectio he means the prayerful, meditative reading of scripture. By silence he suggests the ground for the word to bear fruit. He says, 'In silence the word of scripture can be received and meditated on.' Nouwen talks of guidance as the need for someone competent to help the student through the pitfalls of spiritual formation. Nouwen then goes on to stress in addition that 'Christian spirituality is in essence communal'. 'All of this suggests strongly that spiritual formation in theological education includes ongoing formation in community life'. Nouwen sees the need then for emphasis on the communal in classroom, worship, and responsibility for one another. He says, 'So spiritual life is always communal. It flows from community and it creates community'. Nouwen concludes the article by stressing the role of the Holy Spirit in all spiritual life and ends with the following conclusion: 'Spiritual formation gives us a free heart able to see the face of God in the midst of a hardened world and allows us to use our skills to make that face visible to all who live in darkness'.

Within the article is a separate article by Henri Nouwen called, 'Portrait of Compassion' about his friend Joel Filartiga, which includes a full page illustration by Dr Filartiga, pp 16 &amp; 17. In the first article Nouwen describes how hard it is for most people to feel a sense of compassion when inundated nightly by 'pictures of starving babies, dying soldiers, burning houses, flooded villages and wrecked cars'. He attributes this difficulty in feeling compassion to the sense of being overwhelmed by the massiveness of it and our inability to feel we can do anything. Nouwen then says 'When information about human suffering comes to us through a person who can be embraced, it is humanized'. He uses Thomas Merton as an example of one who received letters from all over the world speaking about human suffering and says, ' In these letters Merton saw the world with its pains and joys; they drew him into a real community of living people with real faces, real tears and real smiles'. Nouwen uses this as an example to suggest that compassion must be rooted in solidarity and community. Nouwen suggests that in our world which tends to value difference, uniqueness, it is our sense of community and our common humanity which will bring about compassion. In the article about Paraguayan Doctor Joel Filartiga Nouwen speaks of the doctor's life serving the very poor of his area, of his defense of the poor and his sharp criticism of the regime. He suggests that because the government could not hurt Joel, they kidnapped, tortured and killed his 17 year old son. Nouwen believes that through the father's suffering for his people and his son, came very powerful drawings which Nouwen and his fellow authors wanted to use in their writings on compassion.

Nouwen points to the prophets and to Jesus to make this point and suggests as an example that 'we cannot suffer with the poor when we are not willing to confront those who cause poverty'. He goes on to state that the confrontation must be a humble one or in risks being self-righteous or self-serving. Nouwen then goes on to discuss the place of anger in confrontation and suggests that, for instance, anger is an appropriate response to injustice. Nouwen concludes the article by stating that 'confrontation always includes self-confrontation. This self- confrontation prevents us from becoming alienated from the world which we must confront'.

Nouwen begins by asking if it isn't preposterous to speak about the mission of Yale because mission implies being sent to serve which for missionaries involves not an upward, but a downward movement to the path of pain and suffering. For Yale students however, he suggests the path is directed upward to be successful lawyers, doctors, executives. Nouwen then goes on to say that he does not see the argument as so simple after all. Nouwen says, 'there is little doubt that Yale is a secular institution. [But] it is also an institution in which the call to service is continually heard.' At Yale, Nouwen points out, hundreds of students study the sacred scriptures, the sacraments of the church are received, 'it is a center where people from the most varied religious traditions meet...it is the home where people come together to assist the poor, visit the elderly, to tutor disadvantaged youth...'. Nouwen concludes by saying, 'so there might be a mission for Yale after all: to send men and women into our society who know the world and have acquired the knowledge and the skills to fulfill a task in it, but who also realize that the value of their lives does not depend on what they have been able to acquire, but on how much they have been able to serve their fellow human beings'.

F4-9-1-1604	Item - Boisen and the case method: roots of the case method in the work of Richard Cabot Winter 1977 21 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 21 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Boisen and the Case Method', published in The Chicago Theological Seminary Register, Boisen Centennial Issue, Winter 1977, Vol. LXVII No.1. The first section entitled 'Roots of the Case Method in the work of Richard Cabot', outlines Boisen's meeting with Dr Richard C. Cabot, MD at the Andover Theological Seminary. Nouwen states, 'The meeting of Cabot and Boisen not only made the start of the clinical training movement possible, but also offered him the model for the theology through living human documents'. Nouwen discusses Cabot's teaching and training methods and his idea for a clinical year for theological students. Nouwen discusses Cabot's Clinicopathological Conferences. This work and the volume which resulted from it 'gave Boisen the clue for much of his later work: the case study method. This method moved from the theoretical learning found in seminaries to the 'investigation of living human documents'. When Boisen moved to be Chaplain at the Worcester State Hospital he insisted that he be allowed to do research and to have 'free access to the case records, the right to visit patients on all the wards, to attend staff meetings where the cases being discussed and to be recognized as part of the therapeutic team'. Nouwen suggests that this was the beginning of the acceptance of Chaplains as an important part of the therapeutic program for patients. Nouwen describes Boisen's core idea for the use of the case system, 'that certain types of mental disorder and certain types of religious experience are alike attempts at reorganization...' Nouwen then speaks of Boisen's limitations in his understanding and use of the case system as relating to his own personal experience of mental illness. He then outlines a case history of 'Jonah' that Boisen frequently used in his teaching and as a tool for training. In conclusion, Nouwen says, '...his idea of training is based on the theoretical principle that theology should derive its authority not from books, but as in every science worth of its name, from observable and controllable data...[Boisen says] I wanted them to learn to read human documents as well as books'.

The article is described as a conference given by Henri Nouwen as part of the program of monthly meetings arranged by the English-speaking councilors of generalates in Rome. Nouwen begins by describing a number of world events occurring in the weeks before, which he concludes leaves our world in 'a state of emergency'. He goes on to say, 'while we approach the end of the second millennium of the Christian era, our world is clouded with an all-pervading fear, a growing sense of despair and the paralyzing awareness that indeed humanity has come on the verge of suicide'. Nouwen then asks how or if, the christian (sic) community can or will respond and says he wishes 'to try to explain how the emergency situation ...in which we live can open for us a new understanding of the indispensability of solitude in the life of the christian community'. Nouwen writes under three major headings: 1) Solitude and Intimacy, 2) Solitude and Ministry and 3) Solitude and Prayer, as they relate to communities of religious. 1) After an introduction in which Nouwen states, 'a community in which no real intimacy can be experienced cannot be a creative witness for very long in our fearful and angry world'. Nouwen then moves to discuss further under two major headings. The first, 'solitude: grounds for community growth' suggests solitude is necessary for the growth of a loving community and for increasing fruitful intimacy among the members. The second sub-heading is 'solitude: where we learn dependence upon God'. Nouwen says here, 'with solitude, we learn to depend on God by whom we are called together in love, in whom we can rest, and through whom we can enjoy and trust one another...' 2) Under the heading Solitude and Ministry Nouwen speaks of the new varieties of ministry available but also of the loss of communal character and therefore, common witness. Under the sub-heading 'solitude: place where common vocation becomes visible' Nouwen states, 'We should never forget that God calls us as a people, and that our individual religious vocation should always be seen as a part of the larger vocation of the community. A further heading in this section is, 'solitude: a place of communal obedience'. 3) In this section headed Solitude and Prayer, Nouwen begins by stating 'It is very simplistic to say that emergencies make people pay more attention to God and re-awaken religious feelings'. He wonders if in fact, the opposite is not true. He goes on to remind religious to be aware of how much secularism has permeated religious life and how prayer is 'has lost its central place'. There are two sub-headings: 'solitude: the place of the great encounter and conversion' in which Nouwen says, 'In solitude we leave behind us our many activities, concerns, plans and projects, opinions and convictions, and enter into the presence of our loving God, totally naked, totally vulnerable, totally open, totally receptive'. In the second sub-heading entitled, 'solitude: unlimited space for others' Nouwen says '...through prayer and especially through intercessory prayer, the religious community stands open to the whole world. By their prayers, the members of a religious community form an open square in which there is space for any and everyone'. Nouwen concludes by saying 'I hope that I have been able to convince you to some degree of the indispensability of solitude in the life of the religious community'. Nouwen begins the article by noting that many people who live in community are asking how to find space and time for themselves because the intensity of community life has proved difficult. Nouwen identifies the purpose of this article as; 'to offer some reflections on solitude in community in the hope that for some communities these ideas may offer new strength to remain faithful to the vision which originally brought them together'. Nouwen begins by identifying two viewpoints about the role of solitude in community which he considers false or too limited: 1) Solitude over against community and 2) Solitude in Service of community. This latter he clarifies solitude considered as simply 'a tool in the service of life together'. Under the heading, 'Solitude and Community' Nouwen suggests what he sees as the real relationship between the two: 'Solitude without community leads us to loneliness and despair, but community without solitude hurls us into a "void of words and feelings"'. He then goes on to state, 'I now would like to develop this view in more detail by relating solitude to intimacy, clarity and prayer'. In discussing what he intends by 'intimacy' Nouwen states that in solitude members of community may grow closer to each other. Nouwen states that constant talking things out without the depth provided by solitude, does not lead to communal growth. He suggests that 'in solitude we are given the awareness of a unity that is prior to all unifying actions'. With regard to 'clarity' Nouwen states, 'In solitude we begin to see more clearly and are more able to distinguish between what can be shared and what should be left unspoken'. In discussing 'prayer' Nouwen says the following 'When I speak of prayer I refer less to saying prayers than to living a prayerful life in which eating and drinking, sleeping waking, working and praying are all done to the honor and glory of God'. Nouwen concludes the article by pointing out the difficulty of living out what he has said because of the many forces against, it but that it would be important then to consider 'Education to solitude...is an important task for communities...'

Nouwen begins the article by pointing out the competitive nature of society and its emphasis on outstanding performance by individuals. Nouwen goes on to suggest that in this atmosphere it 'is not surprising that our sense of self, our self-esteem, begins to depend increasingly on those aspects of our life in which we are different from others'. Nouwen suggests that this is not a value of the Gospel. Nouwen quotes from Paul (Philippians 2:3-5) and states that on the basis of that, we are required to look for our identity 'not where we are different or outstanding but where we are the same'. 'It is the experience of the unconditional love of God that allows us to recognize our common human brokenness and our common need for healing' which lies at the heart of community.

This article was first presented as a lecture at the North American College in Rome, Italy, February 10, 1978. Nouwen begins the article with an image which he uses throughout: the contrast between the crowded streets of Rome and the domes of the many churches which offer space and tranquility and rest in God. Nouwen then identifies as his intention for this article that 'I want to look at celibacy as a witness to the inner sanctum in our own lives and in the lives of others'. He states that he wishes to do this by focusing on three areas: 'the world in which celibacy is lived; the nature of the witness the celibate offers to this world and the way of life through which this witness is enhanced and strengthened'. With regard to the first area Nouwen points to the great stress in society on relationships, being together and other forms of personal interaction. He follows this with his search for answers to the question, 'Can real intimacy be reached without a deep respect for that holy place within and between us, that space that should remain untouched by human hands?' With respect to the second area of witness, Nouwen begins by describing some of the misunderstandings there are about the nature of celibacy. He goes on to state and detail his sense of what celibacy is meant to be in the world: ' Celibacy in its deepest sense of creating and protecting emptiness for God is an essential part of all forms of Christian life: marriage, friendship, single life and community life'. He also suggests that, ' The celibate makes his or her life into a visible witness for the priority of God in our lives, a sign to remind all people that without the inner sanctum our lives lose contact with their source and goal'. In discussing the third area of celibacy as a way of life he stresses two aspects beyond sexual abstinence: contemplative prayer and voluntary poverty. This is followed by a short conclusion and summary.

Nouwen begins the article by asking what is the relationship between contemplation and ministry?. He answers by stating 'The contemplative life is a life with a vision and life of ministry is the life in which this vision is revealed to others'. He speaks then of a spiritual discipline which leads to movement in life from opacity to transparency. Nouwen uses three examples to discuss this: Nature, Time and People. With regard to Nature Nouwen believes that we are no longer able to let nature minister to us; rather we use and abuse it. With regard to Time, Nouwen suggests that time has become almost an enemy rather than a present moment full of God; a kairos. He suggests that 'the contemplative life is the life in which time slowly loses its opaqueness and becomes transparent'. With regard to People, Nouwen states ' contemplation as seeing what is really there has a very significant meaning in the context of interpersonal relationships...here we can begin to see the intimate connection between contemplation and ministry'. Nouwen concludes by discussing briefly two other important aspects of contemplative prayer for ministry: simplicity and obedience.

Nouwen begins by suggesting that we tend to think of prayer as one of many things we do. He then points to St Paul's exhortation that we 'pray unceasingly'. Nouwen then identifies what he sees as the goal of this article: 'I propose to look at unceasing prayer as the conversion of our unceasing thought processes. My central question therefore is: "How can we turn our perpetual mental activities into perpetual prayer?" Or, to put it more simply: How can thinking become praying?' Nouwen moves on to discuss in the first section his understanding of human thought processes and states 'I have been wondering if we ever do not think?' He speaks of reflective, non-reflective and dream thinking. Nouwen points to the great value of thinking to human beings and then moves in the next section to say, 'This unceasing thinking, which lies at the core of our humanity, needs to be converted slowly but persistently into unceasing prayer'. Nouwen's first suggestion is that unceasing prayer cannot be a constant thinking about God. 'To pray, I think, does not primarily mean to think about God in contrast to thinking about other things, or to spend time with God instead of spending time with other people. Rather, it means to think and live in the presence of God'. Nouwen follows this by suggesting that prayer cannot be introspection but it must look outward, a conversation with God, where nothing is hidden. In Nouwen's final section he suggests that to live this life of prayer requires the development of a certain discipline. He then describes in some detail one type of discipline that can be helpful. Nouwen concludes the article by stating, Paul's words ...about unceasing prayer might at first have seemed demanding and unrealistic. Perhaps, we can now see that they can be the source of an ever increasing joy'.

F4-9-1-1620	Item - Solitude: the inner fabric of Christian community March 1979      3 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 3 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Solitude', published in Sojourners magazine, March 1979. A version of this article appeared in the January 1978 issue of Worship magazine. Nouwen begins the article by stating that people often ask, 'How do I find time and space for myself?' in Christian community. Nouwen goes on to say that he wants to begin by speaking of 'two commonly held viewpoints on the role of solitude in community which I consider false, or at least limited'. Nouwen identifies these two viewpoints as: 1) Solitude over against community which he feels is a battle between the needs of the individual and the needs of the community and 2) Solitude in service of community. Here, he suggests, 'we do not look at solitude as time and space for the individual in contrast to the community, but ...solitude is seen as good for the members of the community because they can return from it refreshed and restored and better able to engage in the common task'. This he feels, may be seen as arising out of weakness, or a need for a break. Nouwen states that for him, the best understanding of the need for solitude is that it is 'participating fully in the growth of community. It is a fallacy to think that we come closer to each other only when we talk together...solitude opens us to the awareness of a unity pre-existent to all unifying actions.' Nouwen also speaks of solitude in terms of 'clarity' in which in solitude members of the community can sort through feelings and values before introducing them to the group. Finally, Nouwen speaks of solitude as 'prayer'. Nouwen concludes by stating 'When solitude is given its central place, communities will be able to resist not only the flagrantly visible ills of our society, but also the evils whose roots reach into the depth of our being and threaten the life of our community itself'.

This article is identified as a 'response to "The Work of Prayer" a project of Sojourners to pray for peace in face of the arms race. Nouwen begins by asking what this call might mean: does it represent a failure of action? A turning to God because turning to people didn't help much? A capitulation to quietism? A dramatic gesture? Nouwen believes not: 'I believe that the Sojourners are discovering a dimension of prayer they did not see before...I see their call not as an invitation to retreat into a familiar piety, but as a challenge to make a radical move toward prayer as "the only necessary thing"'. Nouwen suggests prayer as a dying to self, an opening to God, is the ground from which people move out into the world of action. Nouwen concludes, 'When ...our act of prayer remains the act from which all actions flow, we can be joyful even when our times are depressing, peaceful even when the threat of war is all around us, hopeful even when we are constantly tempted to despair.

Nouwen introduces the article by speaking of the relationship between parents and children as one of hospitality. He says, 'Our children are our most important guests, who enter into our home, ask for careful attention, stay for a while and then leave to follow their own way'. He suggests that children are strangers parents need to get to know. Parents offer a safe home where children can ask questions without fear. Nouwen points to Baptism, the child's entry into the church community, as one important source of support in an increasingly isolating society. Nouwen concludes, ' A good host is not only able to receive his guests with honor and offer them all the care they need but also to let them go when their time to leave has come'.

Nouwen begins his talk by identifying what is the heart of Christian ministry: 'that ministers are men and women without power who live in the Name of their Lord and who often see him when they least expect it'. In the first major section entitled 'Without Power' Nouwen states, ' To be a minister means above all to become powerless... to speak with our powerlessness to the condition of powerlessness which is so keenly felt but so seldom expressed by the people of our age'. Nouwen then speaks of the temptation of the minister to give up the sense of powerless to be professional, to be competent and powerful. Nouwen identifies a second temptation as that of wanting to be a spiritual pioneer or the temptation to individualism. There is for Nouwen, the further temptation to cling to the minister's role with regard to the Word and Sacrament as privileged and therefore, powerful. In the second major section entitled 'In the Name' Nouwen says, 'Here we touch the mystery of ministry. Ministers are powerless people who have nothing to boast of except their weaknesses. But when the Lord whom they serve fills them with blessing they will move mountains and change the hearts of people wherever they go.' Nouwen suggests that this aspect of ministry can only be fed by prayer which leads the minister to intimate communion with God. In the final section entitled, ' Seeing God' Nouwen says' This is the secret of ministry: it is the ongoing discovery of God's presence in the midst of the human struggle and the joyful proclamation of that discovery'. Nouwen concludes the talk 'Thus ministers are seers who reach out to their people to reveal to them God's presence in their lives and to call them together to make this divine presence manifest in communal celebration'.

Nouwen introduces the article by speaking of the desert fathers and mothers, in particular he writes briefly of the life of St. Anthony 'the father of monks'. Nouwen identifies in the life of Anthony the profound importance of solitude and states, 'When he emerged from his solitude, people recognized in him the real "healthy" man, whole in body, mind and soul'. Under the heading 'The compulsive minister' Nouwen expresses concern that the lives of many ministers are 'horrendously secular' busy with meetings, people, agendas, services. He suggests the very busyness of this life can be a way to avoid solitude, being alone with God. In the next section entitled, 'The furnace of transformation' Nouwen identifies solitude as the furnace of transformation. 'Solitude is the place of the great struggle and the great encounter'. Here, the minister encounters himself or herself in the struggle to die to the false self, to meet God and 'to be with him and him alone'. In the final heading entitled 'A Compassionate Ministry' Nouwen suggests that the life of prayer in solitude is the source of the quality of compassion for the minister. He concludes by stating, 'In a world that victimizes us by its compulsions, we are called to solitude where we can struggle against our anger and greed and let our new self be born in the loving encounter with Jesus Christ. It is in this solitude that we become compassionate people...'

F4-9-1-1627	Item - Silence, the portable cell: the word which creates communion      July 1980      6 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 4 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'Silence, The Portable Cell', published in Sojourners, July 1980, pp. 22, 24 – 26. This item is part two of a three part series. Nouwen begins by using examples from the writings of the Desert Fathers. He then states, 'Silence is a way to make solitude a reality... It can be seen as a portable cell taken with us from the solitary place into the midst of our ministry. It is solitude practiced in action.' Nouwen's first section discusses what he calls 'Our wordy world' and suggests that we no longer trust another's words because everything is talked about, not much held in silence. In the next section entitled 'Silence' Nouwen takes from the Desert Fathers three aspects of silence: Silence makes us pilgrims, Silence guards the fire within and Silence teaches us to speak. Nouwen's concluding section is entitled: The Ministry of Silence and is divided into three headings: Silence and Preaching, Silence and Counseling and Silence and Organizing. Nouwen concludes by stating 'These examples of silence in preaching, counseling and organizing are meant to illustrate how silence can determine the concrete shape of our ministry. But let us not be too literal about silence. After all, silence of the heart is much more important than silence of the mouth'.

Review 1980 July/Aug" written on top of the first page of the article. This item contains two small black and white photos of Nouwen taken at the conference. Scope and content: This item is a 6 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Reflections on Compassion' which was the Keynote address at the annual assembly of the Catholic Health Association of Canada, published in the C.H.A.C. Review, July/August, 1980. Nouwen opens his talk with a quotation from the Letter to the Philippians 2: 1 – 11. In his introduction he begins by asking the people if they think they are compassionate which he suggests means 'to enter, with other people, where it hurts; to enter places of pain; to be there where people are suffering'. He suggests that we do not of our own accord do this and that it is God only who is compassionate. Nouwen suggests that one reason we are not compassionate is that we are too competitive. He goes on to state that God who is in no way in competition with us nevertheless became like us but not to take 'our pains away but to share them, to enter them and to become fully part of them. Nouwen asks his audience to think of those people who are most meaningful to us. Are they not the people who remain alongside us in our need? Nouwen speaks of Jesus' powerful response of caring as described in the scriptures; a caring that comes from his 'gut'. 'Jesus felt the pain so deeply, he trembled so deeply that he trembled people to new life. He was moved, and out of that inner divine movement new health, cure and change came about'. Nouwen then speaks of the distinction between cure and care. Cure without care can be harmful, even violent. 'Care broadens your vision; care makes you see around you; care makes you aware of possibilities'. Finally, Nouwen speaks of the possibility of being compassionate both in presence and absence.

F4-9-1-1629	Item - Descend with the mind into the heart: the call to unceasing prayer      August 1980      5 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a five page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Descend with the Mind into the Heart; the call to unceasing prayer', published in Sojourners, August 20, 1980, pp: 20 – 24. This is the third part of a series which included articles on solitude and silence. Nouwen begins by stating 'solitude and silence can never be separated from the call to unceasing prayer'. He also, once again uses stories from the desert fathers beginning with Arsenius to point to the importance of prayer. Nouwen, in his first part of this article headed, Prayer of the Mind, suggests that most ministers would say that prayer is of the utmost importance but that in fact, they don't do it. 'The contrast between the great support for the idea of prayer and the lack of support for the practice of it is so blatantly visible that it becomes quite easy to believe in the ruses of the evil one which Amma Theodora describes with such vivid detail. These ruses are identified as: 1) to make us think of prayer as an activity of the mind 2) a viewpoint that restricts the meaning of prayer to thinking about God. Nouwen states that 'both these views of prayer are the products of a culture in which high value is place on mastering the world through the intellect'. Nouwen then goes on to discuss what he identifies as the prayer of the heart 'which leads to that rest where the soul can dwell with God'. Nouwen identifies in his concluding section entitled 'Prayer and Ministry' three disciplines of prayer: 1) Nurtured by short prayers 2) unceasing and 3) all-inclusive. Nouwen concludes this third article by stating: 'When we have been remodeled into living witnesses of Christ through solitude, silence and prayer, we will no longer have to worry about whether we are saying the right thing or making the right gesture, because then Christ will make his presence known even when we are not aware of it'.
F4-9-1-1630	Item - Do not worry all things will be given: spiritual life      September 1980      4 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 3 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Do Not Worry, All Things will be Given', published in the Catholic Agitator September, 1980, Vol. 10 No. 7, pp. 1 – 3. Nouwen begins the article by stating 'Worrying is such a part and parcel of our daily life that not worrying seems not only impossible but even undesirable'. Nouwen then outlines his intentions for the article, 'In the first section I will discuss how worrying affects our daily life. In the second part I hope to show how Jesus responds to our paralyzing worries by offering us a new life, a life in the Spirit. Finally, in the last section I want to offer some specific disciplines which can cause our worries to slowly lose their power over us and allow us to experience unceasingly the freedom of God's Spirit'. In Part I Nouwen speaks of our lives as being filled with busyness and yet also being unfulfilled. In Part II, Nouwen points to Jesus' busy and yet focused life and suggests that Jesus in his Spirit wants that for us too. 'Poverty, pain, struggle, anguish, agony and even inner darkness may continue to be part of our experience. They might even be God's way of purifying us. But life is no longer boring, lonely, resentful or depressing because we have come to know that everything that happens is part of our way to the house of the Father'. In Part III Nouwen speaks of the need each of us has for both solitude and community as the way to this fulfilment.

This item is part of an article entitled 'What is the Goal of Spiritual Growth?' Nouwen suggests that spiritual growth is 'a gradual development from an absurd life to an obedient life'. Nouwen identifies the origin of the word absurd as 'surdus' which means deaf and of obedience as 'audire' which means to listen. 'An absurd life is a life in which we remain deaf to God. An obedient life is a life in which we try to listen carefully to his voice calling us to freedom'.

Nouwen begins by identifying his physical and emotional tiredness when he arrived at the conference but then states, 'My week [at Woodland Park] will stick in my mind as one of the most hopeful events of my life'. Nouwen states that he does not speak of hope as optimism but the hope and trust in God who promises 'unwavering faithfulness'. Nouwen then goes on to state that he learned from the conference that there are two essential aspects to the common life: prayer and resistance. Prayer holds the community steady and resistance is 'an act of visible protest against the powers who are bent on waging war even at the cost of the destruction of humanity'.

Nouwen begins this article by stating his definition of spiritual direction. 'Spiritual direction is direction given to people in their relationship with God' Nouwen then goes on to say 'I would like to offer a few ideas which might help in defining the nature of this ministry...which might begin to suggest some concrete ways in which this ministry can be practiced'. Under his first heading which speaks about the movement 'from absurdity to obedience' Nouwen defines the first as the root of 'deaf' and the second as the root of 'listening'. Nouwen speaks of the difficulty of moving from the busyness of the absurd/deaf life to being willing to hear and then gain the discipline of obedient following of God. In his second section Nouwen speaks of 'The three disciplines of the spiritual life'. These disciplines are identified as: the discipline of the church, the discipline of the Book and the discipline of the heart. Nouwen concludes his article by suggesting that at this time in history when many traditional ways of living are breaking down and people are turning to religious leaders for guidance, this is more than ever a time to consider spiritual direction.

(see item 1626, Box 295). This item is an excerpt from: Nouwen, Henri, 'The Way of the Heart: The Spirituality of the Desert Fathers and Mothers', HarperCollins, N.Y., 1981. Scope and content: This item is a 6 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Encounter in Solitude' and is an excerpt from his book 'The Way of the Heart' published in The Sign, February, 1981, pp. 12 - 17. Nouwen introduces the article by speaking of the desert fathers and mothers, in particular he writes of the life of St. Anthony 'the father of monks'. Nouwen identifies in the life of Anthony the profound importance of solitude and states, 'When he emerged from his solitude, people recognized in him the real "healthy" man, whole in body, mind and soul'. Nouwen expresses concern that the lives of many people are 'horrendously secular'. Nouwen identifies 'the two main enemies of the spiritual life: anger and greed. He also suggests that the very busyness of life can be a way to avoid solitude, being alone with God. Nouwen describes solitude as 'the furnace of transformation'. 'Solitude is the place of the great struggle and the great encounter – the struggle against the compulsions of the false self, and the encounter with the loving God who offers himself as the substance of the new self'. Nouwen speaks then of the fruit of solitude, 'it is compassion'. He concludes by stating, 'In a world that victimizes us by its compulsions, we are called to solitude where we can struggle against our anger and greed and let our new self be born in the loving encounter with Jesus Christ. It is in this solitude that we become compassionate people...'

F4-9-1-1636	Item - The selfless way of Christ June 1981 4 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 4 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'The Selfless Way of the Christ: Downward mobility as Christian vocation', published in Sojourners, June , 1981, pp. 12- 15. This is the first of a three part series (see July and August 1981). Nouwen's introduction notes that ministry 'is a true witness only when it emerges out of a genuine personal encounter, a true experience of love'. He goes on to say that this personal encounter and love is with Jesus Christ and these articles will probe the 'direct relationship between our ministry and our spiritual life... [and] the radical claim the gospel puts upon us'. Nouwen writes that this commitment in ministry must be all inclusive, total. 'One cannot be a little bit for Christ'. After the introduction the first section is entitled 'Upward Mobility' Here, Nouwen speaks about the reality that our society values more than anything, the idea that upward mobility is good and to fail in this is a failure of life. In the second section entitled 'Downward Mobility', Nouwen states that the 'story of our salvation stands radically over and against the philosophy of upward mobility'. Nouwen examines a number of biblical quotations which support this. Nouwen concludes the section by stating that 'following Jesus on the downward road means entering into a new life, the life of the Spirit of Jesus himself'. Nouwen entitles his final section 'The Spiritual Life', Nouwen asks if this downward mobility can really be an option, if it is really too much and needs to be mitigated. Nouwen's theme here is that the disciple, the minister who listens to the Spirit of Christ will be free to take the downwardly mobile path.
F4-9-1-1637	Item - Temptation: the pull toward upward mobility July 1981 3 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 3 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Temptation', published in Sojourners, Vol. 10, No. 7, July , 1981, pp. 25 -27. This is part two of a three part series. Nouwen begins by stating that the spiritual life is 'the life of the Spirit of Christ within and among us'. He then suggests that there is also the 'Evil One' who roams among us and tempts us away from the life of Jesus. This article looks at the three temptations of Jesus in the wilderness. The first temptation Nouwen identifies as the temptation to be relevant. 'This temptation touches us at the center of our identity. In a variety of ways we are made to believe that we are what we produce'. The second temptation Nouwen identifies as the temptation to be spectacular. 'We have come to believe that a service is valuable when many attend, a protest meeting is worthwhile when television cameras are present...' Nouwen suggests that we value things that get a great deal of attention but forget the quiet unobtrusive ways of Jesus. The third temptation is the temptation to be powerful. Nouwen suggests we long for power, but the more we have the less we are satisfied. He goes on to point out that the only power that 'works' is the power of God which is often seen as powerlessness. 'We do not belong to the world. We belong to God'.

F4-9-1-1638	Item - A self-emptied heart: the disciplines of spiritual formation August 1981      3 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a three page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'A Self-Emptied Heart: The Disciplines of spiritual formation', published in Sojourners, Vol. 10, No. 8, August , 1981, pp. 20 – 22. This is part three of a three part series. Nouwen begins this article by stating that discipleship requires discipline. He identifies three disciplines in particular: 1) the discipline of the church – 'by which we remain in touch with the true story of God in history. Nouwen identifies the importance of the church community , ' The attention to the presence of Christ in our own personal story can only remain free from self-deception when we remain attentive to the presence of Christ in the daily life of the church'. 2) The discipline of the book – here Nouwen emphasizes the necessity of reading the scriptures deeply and meditatively. 3) The discipline of the heart – 'The discipline of the heart is the discipline of personal prayer which... leads us not just to our own heart, but to the heart of God'. Nouwen concludes this series of three articles, 'We are called to follow Christ on his downwardly mobile road, tempted to choose the broad path of success, notoriety, and influence, and challenged to subject ourselves to spiritual disciplines in order to gradually conform to the image of our Lord Jesus Christ'.

Nouwen identifies his intention in this talk to reflect on a 'spirituality of peacemaking' using three key words: prayer, resistance and community. In his discussion of prayer Nouwen first speaks of the difference between speaking out of our needs: for affection, attention, power and speaking from our relationship with God rooted in prayer. 'Now prayer is that slow process in which we move away from that dark sticky place of our needs into the light of Christ'. Nouwen also identifies prayer as an act of resistance, 'resistance against this needy, sucking and frightening go-around'. Nouwen then reflects on the word resistance. 'Resistance means to say No! No! No! against all the forces of death'. Nouwen speaks about the power then of life and our resistance to it and that is our struggle not just in the big things in life but the small. Nouwen goes on to suggest that resistance is not just to say No! but even more to say yes. 'Resistance in the deepest sense means to continuously proclaim that God is a God of the living, that God is a God of life'. Nouwen also states that 'Resistance is prayer because it is a proclamation and a confession of the living God'. In discussing the third word 'community', Nouwen identifies community as the place of prayer and resistance. The person who acts towards peace with the support of community is rooted in a place of acceptance and forgiveness. Nouwen concludes the talk by saying that he believes the most important point is that 'community is to be a Eucharistic community'.

This item is an excerpt from Nouwen's book, 'Gracias: A Latin American Journal'. This article consists of five diary entries Nouwen made in his time spent in Peru and Bolivia. In his entries Nouwen struggles with the contrast of his usual life and the life of the very poor in which he is trying to be immersed. He describes visits with colleagues to a place where handicapped children are helped; visits with children whose need for physical comfort is great; the children who are without parents and in need of food; and a visit to a new library where the children and others can come and read. He comments on the great thirst these young people have for learning.

This item is an excerpt from Nouwen's book, 'Gracias: A Latin American Journal'. In this excerpt Nouwen describes a visit on November 2, All souls Day, to a cemetery with thousands of others to remember and to share with the dead. Nouwen describes a sense he had earlier in the day in which he felt strongly, 'part of the meaning of life for the living is their opportunity to pray for the full liberation of those died before them'. Nouwen describes what he saw as he entered the cemetery, 'Thousands of people were sitting and walking around the graves as though they were camping out with their beloved ones who had died'. He goes on to describe the young boys who offer at each grave to pray for the deceased and in return receive gifts of food. In his conclusion Nouwen says, 'When I returned home I had the feeling that the poor Indians of Cochabamba had given me a glimpse of a reality that mostly remains hidden in my rational, well planned and well protected life. I had heard voice, seen faces and touched hands that pointed to a divine love in which the living and the dead can find a safe home'.

This is an excerpt from Nouwen's book, Gracias!: A Latin American Journal. In this excerpt Nouwen writes of his sense of the power of the vocation to pray living amidst the poor of Cochabamba in Bolivia. He says, 'True prayer always includes becoming poor. When we pray we stand naked and vulnerable in front of Our Lord and show him our true condition'. Part of the need for prayer as Nouwen describes it, using Psalm 80 as an example is to call God to task, 'for challenging Him to make His love felt among the poor, is more urgent than ever'.

The item was published posthumously and was originally identified by Nouwen as part of a proposed volume tentatively entitled: A Spirituality of Peacemaking which was not published in his lifetime. Scope and content: This item is a 3 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: 'Prayer and Peacemaking' published in the Catholic Agitator by the Los Angeles Catholic Worker, December 1982, Vol. 12, No. 10. Nouwen begins by stating, 'A peacemaker prays. Prayer is the beginning and the end, the sources and the fruit, the core and the context, the basis and the goal of all peacemaking.' Nouwen uses the image of dwelling place throughout: do we live in the dwelling place of fear or the dwelling place of Jesus. 'Praying is living in the house of the Lord'. Nouwen then goes on to describe what he sees as the 'depth of human need': our need for attention, affection, influence, power, and to be worthwhile. He then asks 'why is it that our own needs are spoiling even the most altruistic gestures?' Nouwen heads the next few sections: Those who hate peace; Dark works of conflict; Holy duty, which outline his sense that fear is one of the most powerful forces which fight against peace. Nouwen then speaks of the gospel message that prayer drives out fear and that only peacemaking rooted in Love is real peacemaking. He concludes: 'The life of prayer, the spiritual life, thus becomes not one of the obligations peacemakers should not forget, but the essence of all they do, think or say in the service of peace'.

This article is an entry from Nouwen's book entitled, Gracias! Nouwen in this entry begins by reflecting, 'Gratitude is becoming increasingly important for those who want to bring the good news of the Kingdom to others'. He goes on to state, 'Gratitude is the habit of mind that enables us to receive the hidden gifts of those we want to serve and to make these gifts visible to the community as a source for celebration.' Nouwen develops the theme of the minister/missionary whose need is to realize their own poverty and to be willing to receive as well as to give. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'Seeing God in the world and making Him visible to each other is the core of ministry as well as the core of the contemplative life'.

The item is an excerpt of two entries from Nouwen's book, 'Gracias!'. Nouwen opens the article by reporting something said by Tom Burns, a Maryknoller: 'the poor consider as a gift what we claim as a right'. Nouwen goes on to say how we think in terms of our right to food, health, shelter and education which then leads us to see these as possessions to be defended. Nouwen then states that a 'basic sense of gratitude is indeed one of the most visible characteristics of the poor, I have come to know'. In the second entry Nouwen asks why people become missionaries. He suggests two of the most 'damaging' motives as guilt and desire to save. Nouwen identifies the great challenge which 'is to live and work out of gratitude'. He follows this by suggesting that when the missionary comes to realize 'that our guilt has been taken away and that only God saves, then we are free to serve, then we can live truly humble lives'.

There is a side comment that 'these comments are from a speech Nouwen made July 27, in Washington D.C. Nouwen begins the article by stating that he sees the spiritual destinies of the two Americas, North and South as being intimately connected. He points to what he describes as the 'fraying of the chord called Central America, which binds these two continents together' as being caused not simply by economic, social, political or military reasons, but also spiritual ones. Nouwen then speaks of a visit he made to a small village on the border of Nicaragua and Honduras where he speaks with the people who had suffered deeply in a war supported, Nouwen suggests, by the United States. He then describes a moment of forgiveness asked for and given and he says he experiences 'an incredible hope'. Throughout the article Nouwen sees Christ as the binding force of the hope.

Nouwen opens by suggesting that various of the Beatitudes 'jump out' at certain historical times. He states his sense that for this time the question is , 'how are we going to live out "blessed are the peacemakers"? Nouwen states that this is a question for all Christians and all churches. Nouwen states that he wishes to use the words of Jesus, 'May you have peace in Me; in the world you will have trouble. I have come to conquer the world'. Nouwen goes on to say that he wishes to use these words to speak about peace in terms of prayer, resistance and community. Nouwen suggests that human beings act out neediness, woundedness, aggression and this is a barrier to peace. 'But I say that Jesus Christ came to take us out of that interlocking world of needs...Prayer and the life of prayer is the life in which we move out of that dwelling place of needing and move towards the house of the Lord'. Nouwen follows this by suggesting that prayer gives us the ability to resist evil, to resist being overcome by suffering and death. Finally, Nouwen states that 'it is the community that helps us to see the true meaning of prayer and resistance'. Nouwen concludes by stating that 'we are a Eucharistic people and that is to be peacemakers'.

The first section is entitled: 'Intimacy: the Discipline of Prayer'. The section begins with questions: Where have you made your home? Where do you belong? Where do you have your address so you can be addressed? Nouwen links these questions with Jesus' announcement that he will live in us. Nouwen discusses the need we all have to be liked, to be respected, to be successful. 'The more compliments we get, the more we seem to need.' Nouwen describes humanity's struggles with this through all time, the violence and greed associated with this and then reminds us that the Good News of the Gospel can break the network. 'To do this takes a discipline of prayer because in the WORD intimacy is nurtured and developed'. In the second section entitled: Fecundity: Discipline of Community Nouwen reminds us that we are called to be fruitful and to help others to be so as well. Nouwen sees that this discipline develops in community where we recognize God in our neighbor. The third section is entitled: Ecstasy: Discipline of Healing. Nouwen identifies ecstasy as a 'life of joy' and states that we have to move out of the static place. We are to move out of the place of safety and security 'and to move to the openness of life'.

John Dear, Orbis Books, Maryknoll, N.Y., 1998 and in an article entitled 'Christ of the Americas', published in America, April 21, 1984. Nouwen begins by stating that 'God wants...North and South America...to live in peace and express their faith together'. He goes on to describe the inflamed and dangerous situation of 'the chord that binds them' Central America. Nouwen describes some of the people he listened to in his visit to Nicaragua and his feelings about the role played by the churches and the government including that of the United States. Nouwen begins by stating that his returning from Nicaragua to the United States to give this and other talks resulted from an unintended month-long stop in Nicaragua on his way to Peru. Nouwen states that his visit made him aware of the turmoil and potential possibility of war in Central America and he felt he needed to return to the United States in order to 'say, loudly and clearly, let us work together to prevent war'. He goes on to state that he has, for some time, seen that the 'spiritual destiny of North America is somehow intimately connected with the spiritual destiny of Latin America'. Nouwen states then, that he wishes to speak as honestly as he can of what he experienced in Nicaragua. He describes his desire to listen to as many voices as he could from government, church and people. From his discussion with government people he identifies several points: 1) 'I learned...that the revolution ...has given the people a new sense of dignity 2) 'From my observations ...the revolution is a deeply Christian event. Nouwen felt the leaders have been 'formed in a deep way' by the word of God and their own suffering, 3)'What you see and hear is that the revolution is for the people, for the poor'. From his experience of the church in Nicaragua, which he describes as 'divided', 'polarized. 'I suddenly realized the enormous pain and agony of the church.' It was when Nouwen spoke with 'the people' that he finally felt he understood what his task was; why he was there. From the people he discovered that there was still much suffering in their lives in spite of the revolution although to some extent it was recognized that this was caused by outside forces such as the American economic blockade. However in spite of this suffering he felt a measure of hope but also a certainty that the United States must not interfere any longer. Nouwen concludes by stating he has a whole new awareness of the words of the Mass: 'Christ has died, Christ is risen, Christ will come again'.

This is a photocopy of the original article. Nouwen begins this article by stating, 'Having been for some time in Nicaragua, I feel a deep and painful urge to cry out to all who can hear me: please allow this country to live and be a sign of hope!' Nouwen describes throughout the article the border attacks 'by armies organized and supported by the United States'. Nouwen reports on the history of the Sandanista revolution in 1979, the deep Christian roots of its leaders and its hope to be allowed peacefully to rebuild their society. Nouwen describes the ever-present threat of war with United States backed rebels in Honduras on the northern border. Nouwen spends much of the article writing on his trip to the border region with an American reporter and an American forester who had offered his services to the government. Nouwen describes the people they meet on this journey and is especially struck by their hope for their country and its relatively new government. Nouwen concludes the article by stating, ' My most fervent prayer was that the people of the United States, especially Christians, would do all within their power to stop the destructive policy of the U.S. government toward this small, courageous and hopeful people, and express in any way possible their solidarity with their suffering brothers and sisters of Nicaragua'.

This article is a chapter from Nouwen's book 'Gracias' covering the dates January 24 to January 31, 1982. In Nouwen's first entry, for the 24th January, he writes about the fact that it is his 50th birthday and describes the various celebrations and calls that he received. Nouwen writes, 'Within a few years...I will no longer be on this earth. The thought of this does not frighten me but fills me with a quiet peace'. For the next day he describes a lecture given to a group of women about the history of Peru and how they came to live life as they do. The third day he describes the vigilance needed against pickpockets and robbers but also tells a story which describes the pitfalls of hyper-vigilance. The following entry speaks of the gift of the children and their affection for him. Another day includes a visit to the beach with some colleagues and following that Nouwen describes the ever-present dust of Pamplona Alta and how it permeates everything. In the final entry for the week he speaks of saying Mass and realizing that unlike Jesus to whom people listened intently, he is facing a congregation who may not be listening. Nouwen realizes that when his actions match his words, his words will have power.

He suggests that gratitude has not been a strong element in the life of missionaries. Nouwen then goes on to say, 'True missionaries are people who are hunting for the divine treasure hidden in the heart of the people to whom they want to make the good news known....The great paradox of ministry therefore, is that we minister above all with our weakness, a weakness that invites us to receive from those to whom we go'. Nouwen concludes by suggesting that gratitude is not a psychological disposition but a virtue that is only a fruit of prayer, 'This viewpoint explains why true ministers, true missionaries, are always also contemplatives'.

He suggests that the word 'care' has often been misused and offers several examples. Nouwen goes on to say '... we tend to look at caring as an attitude of the strong toward the weak, of the powerful toward the powerless'. However, Nouwen suggests that real caring is when another shares our pain, touches our wounds with a 'gentle and tender hand'. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'To care means first of all to be present to each other...presence is a healing presence because they accept you on your terms and they encourage you to take your own life seriously...'.

Nouwen is reviewing a book by Gustavo Gutierrez entitled 'We Drink From Our Own Wells: The Spiritual Journey of a People' and that is also the title of the review. Nouwen opens the review by noting Gutierrez' earlier book entitled 'A Theology of Liberation' which he suggests 'soon became a charter for many Latin American theologians and pastoral workers'. Nouwen then goes on to describe this new book as 'the nuanced articulation the Christ-encounter as experienced by the poor of Latin America in their struggle to affirm their human dignity and claim their true identity as sons and daughters of God'. Nouwen then goes on to describe his own personal experience of hearing Gutierrez speak before this book was written and his sense of the effect of his spirituality on those who were working for the poor in Latin America. Nouwen quotes Gutierrez "Poverty means death" and goes on to describe what this involves, 'This death is not only physical but mental and cultural as well. It refers to the destruction of individual persons, peoples, cultures and traditions'. Nouwen then outlines three aspects of the spirituality of liberation described in the book: 1) that it is impossible to reduce liberation theology to a political movement, 2) that it is Christ-centered and 3) that is drawn from the concrete daily experiences of the Christian communities in Latin America. Nouwen states toward the conclusion, 'When Gustavo Gutierrez points to freedom as the goal of a spirituality of liberation, he connects the struggle of the people of Latin America with the spiritual struggle of all the great Christians throughout the centuries'. Nouwen concludes the review with a re-iteration of his own sense that the spiritual destinies of the Americas are closely linked.

This article is identified as an adaptation of a talk given by Henri Nouwen during a vigil for peace and non-intervention in Central America which was held in Philadelphia, Fall 1983. Nouwen opens the article by stating, 'As people of God we are called to know God. Yet we who live in North America will never fully know God if we ignore the way God speaks to us through the people of South America'. This theme runs through the article which asks people to become involved in the struggles and sufferings currently in Central and South America. Nouwen describes his own attempts to understand what is happening there by going himself to Nicaragua. He states that the more people he talked to, the more confused he became and the more aware of deep divisions even among Christians. He asks 'How can one live in such a world and be faithful? How can one live in a country in which even the Christians are growing more and more suspicious of one another? How can one live in that world and find one's own spiritual center?' Nouwen's answer is to look at the 'deep truth of those words we repeat so often: "Christ has died, Christ is risen, Christ will come again". For Nouwen there is the revelation of God's suffering in the men, women and children of Central America; Nouwen then sees that because Christ is risen 'that Jesus has overcome death; he has overcome evil and agony. Nouwen then states, "Christ will come again". What does this mean for us today?' His answer is that Christ will not ask us if we have been successful but what we have done to serve the least of Christ's people. Nouwen concludes by asking, 'Are we willing to be weak and vulnerable with those who suffer? Are we willing to sit in solidarity with them and share their sorrow, their anxiety, their agony?'

This article is identified as a condensation from a talk which Nouwen gave in Pasadena, Ca. on October 10, 1983. Nouwen opens the article by stating, 'Every time we celebrate the Eucharist we say, "Christ has died, Christ has risen, Christ will come again". I have repeated those words over and over again daily, but since I went to Central America they have taken on new meaning for me'. In the first section of the article entitled 'Christ has died', Nouwen says that in his visit to Nicaragua 'I saw Christ being crucified again'. He reminds people that even though they may have many troubles at home the Christian also enters into the heart of God who 'became all humanity' and that there is therefore a broader responsibility for one another. Nouwen discusses his hope that the church in Central America would at least be providing a word of peace and hope but that instead he found division and confusion. In the second section entitled, 'Christ has risen' Nouwen begins by stating that this means that 'there is no pain or agony or confusion or conflict that has the final say'. Nouwen speaks of the meeting between a number of Americans and some women of Nicaragua who had lost children, husbands and others to U.S. supported violence from Honduras. The Americans asked forgiveness for the actions of their government and in a moment of powerful presence, it was given. 'They wanted us to be free from our guilt so that we could speak for them and for peace. In the third section entitled, 'Christ will come again' Nouwen says that that moment will be when Christ does not ask if you were successful but what we have done 'for the least of these'.

No. 15, pp. 293 – 302. This item was later published in Nouwen, Henri: The Road to Peace, ed. John Dear, 1998. In this article Nouwen is writing about the situation then current in Central America, specifically, Nicaragua which he had just visited. Nouwen states that he believes that the 'suffering Christ of North America and the suffering Christ of South America were one'. Nouwen divides the article into three sections: Christ has Died, 2) Christ has Risen, 3) Christ will Come Again. In the first section, Nouwen states that there is no suffering which has not been suffered by God. 'There can be no human beings who are completely alone in their sufferings since God, in and through Jesus, has become...God with us'. Nouwen goes on to say that the people of Nicaragua are our brothers and sisters and that no political ideology should blind us to that. Nouwen states that he had hoped to find the Nicaraguan church as a support to the people who are suffering but sees instead, division. 'I had to hold on to the truth that the tearing apart of the Word outside as well as inside the church was the bitter fruit of five centuries of unfaithfulness'. 2) In this section, Christ has Risen, Nouwen begins by asking, 'Can we face the death of Christ without knowing about his resurrection?' 'Christ is risen means that guilt, loneliness, hunger, poverty, war and devastation no longer have the last word.' Nouwen uses an example of this, a meeting he attended with some women on the border with Honduras who had lost family and suffered greatly from soldiers armed and supported by the American government. Nouwen describes in this meeting as a moment of unexpected forgiveness. In 3) Christ will Come Again, Nouwen suggests that this is about Christ returning as judge. The question asked of each person will not be how successful you have been but 'what have you done for the least of mine?'. This question will be asked of nations as well as individuals. Nouwen writes of the fears of the United States government and their harsh treatment of a small, poor nation as resulting from a fear of communism and of the Soviet Union. Nouwen ends this section by suggesting 'The Lord who becomes one of us in humility does not really judge us. He reveals to us what we have become to one another'. Nouwen concludes the article by stating how crucial prayer is and will be in our efforts to 'keep our eyes fixed on Jesus' to bring peace to our world.

Nouwen begins with a quotation from John's Gospel, Chapter 15, and introduces a connection with this gospel passage and the work of Jean Vanier, the founder of L'Arche. 'Out of that experience of living with severely handicapped people, Jean Vanier came to a conclusion, a kind of vision, that all human beings have three rights, or three privileges. They are the right and privilege of intimacy, the right and privilege of fecundity, and the right and privilege of ecstasy'. Nouwen then goes on to discuss each of these three 'rights'. He begins by noting how difficult intimacy is for modern people; that people are unhappy and often at the mercy of their needs and the wounds of generations. Nouwen then asks, 'Is there another way of living?' and suggests that when Jesus says 'make your home in me', the answer is to be found there. With regard to fecundity, Nouwen begins by distinguishing between fruitfulness and productivity. He goes on to describe our society's need to measure and control and duplicate, which he sees as productivity. Fruitfulness, Nouwen describes as a gift of vulnerability. 'Probably the most important quality of fruit is that we have to leave it alone in order for it to grow'. In the final section on ecstasy Nouwen speaks of joy, the joy given by Jesus. Nouwen suggests that so many people live at a level of busyness, boredom and a sense of meaninglessness. He suggests that to be ecstatic is to move out of a state of being static; being willing to change and grow; to choose life. Nouwen concludes by saying, 'Wherever we live, we can live celebrating ecstatically, always having a party. There's something new, a smile, because God is with us and we want to live'.

Nouwen introduces the article by asking, 'How can we live in the midst of a world marked by fear, hatred and violence and not be destroyed by it?' He describes this as the essence of the spiritual life and speaks about the icon as reflecting 'the house of love'. From meditation upon this house of love we can move into the world to be present to but not to be part of, this world. Under the heading: 'The Icon: A Gentle Invitation' Nouwen speaks about the effect that contemplation of this icon had upon him. In the second section entitled, 'Where Heart Speaks to Heart', Nouwen speaks of how contemplation of the icon 'reveals the inner beauty of God'. In a third section entitled, 'The Circle, The Cross and Liberation', speaks of the link between the cross and love in our world today. Finally, in a section entitled, Spirituality: The Source of Confident Commitment, Nouwen concludes by saying, 'I pray that Rublev's icon will teach many how to live in the midst of a fearful, hateful and violent world while moving always deeper into the house of love'.

Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'The words we most need to hear during these turbulent days are: "Do not be afraid"'. Nouwen then goes on to describe the power of fear current in society. He suggests however that fear omnipresent as it is need not be considered acceptable; that it is still possible to live in 'the house of love'. Nouwen identifies Jean Vanier, founder of the L'Arche movement as the one who helped him to see that 'intimacy, fecundity and ecstasy are the three qualities of a life together in the house of love'. Nouwen goes on to talk about 'home', 'homelessness' and suggests that intimacy is the first and most obvious quality of home. Nouwen writes of the connection between intimacy and what people might think is counter-intuitive, solidarity with others. The solidarity in intimacy is Nouwen's sense of the meeting of all human beings, in the heart of Jesus. 'Living in the intimacy of God's home we can come to see that the God who loves us with a perfect love includes all human beings in that love without in any way diminishing the unique quality of this love for each individual person'. Nouwen concludes the article by again referencing Jean Vanier and his work with mentally handicapped people especially as it is a reminder of solidarity with the weak, the poor, the 'inefficient'.

In the introduction Nouwen defines spiritual direction and identifies his intention in the article: ' In these reflections, I would like to offer a few ideas which might help in defining the nature of this ministry of spiritual direction and which might begin to suggest some concrete ways in which this ministry can be practiced'. This article, which is the first of 3, focuses on 'The Movement from Absurdity to Obedience'. Nouwen suggests that absurd living is being deaf to God, being unable to find the silence to hear God in our busy lives. He then indicates the reality of obedience: 'The obedient life forms the other end of the spiritual spectrum. The word obedience includes the word "audire" which means "listening"...' Nouwen speaks, finally about the difficulty of the road from absurdity to obedience.

This item appears to be an excerpt from Reflection by Yale University Divinity School and Berkeley Divinity School, Connecticut, January 1981, Vol. 78, No. 2, pp. 7 - 8. Nouwen speaks of the discipline of the heart and its need for spiritual direction. Nouwen identifies the spiritual director as 'a mature fellow Christian' whom one may see regularly or from time to time according to need. Nouwen concludes by stating 'It is important that we are thinking about a ministry in which we help one another to practice the disciplines of the Church, the Book and the Heart and thus live a life in which we become more and more sensitive to the ongoing presence of God in our lives'.

Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'To work for peace is to work for life. But more than ever before in history we are surrounded by the powers of death'. Nouwen goes on to write about the way the current sense of nuclear threat hangs over people, especially young people who wonder if they have a future at all. At the same time, he suggests that we as human beings are fascinated by death and destruction and that much of our entertainment involves violence. In a section entitled 'The Deadly Judgments' Nouwen then suggests that in our thoughts and judgments about others whom we come to see as the enemy, we commit violence. 'Judging others implies that somehow we stand outside of the place where weak, broken, sinful human beings dwell. It is an arrogant and pretentious act that shows blindness not only toward others but also toward ourselves'. Nouwen suggests that the peacemaker must have the courage 'to see the powers of death at work even in our innermost selves'. Nouwen speaks of the nature of death as against that of life: 'Death in all its manifestations always involves a returning to a fixed, static, unchangeable place'... Life means mobility and change. Wherever there is life there is movement and growth...essential to living is trust in an unknown future...' Finally, Nouwen states that 'Real resistance [to death and violence] requires the humble confession that we are partners in the evil that we seek to resist'.

It was previously published in Sojourners, May, 1979. Nouwen begins by stating 'The call to prayer is not an invitation to retreat to a familiar piety, but a challenge to make a radical move toward prayer as "the only necessary thing"'. Nouwen suggests prayer is a dying to self, a call to martyrdom, an opening to God, and is the ground from which people move out into the world of action. Nouwen quotes from a recent book by holocaust survivor Floris B. Bakels about the power prayer had for him in the camp. Nouwen writes about our ambivalence toward prayer, being drawn to it and yet resistant to it because of the demands we feel will be made by God. Nouwen concludes, 'When ...our act of prayer remains the act from which all actions flow, we can be joyful even when our times are depressing, peaceful even when the threat of war is all around us, hopeful even when we are constantly tempted to despair'.

Nouwen opens the article by pointing to the immediacy of our awareness of the many trials and wars in our world via the media. He then asks 'Do we pray more for our deeply wounded world since we know so much more about it?'. Nouwen describes the purpose of this article by stating 'I'd like to explore why praying for the world and the missions has become so difficult and propose a way to make prayer the solid basis of all mission work.' Nouwen points to the difficulty modern people feel in carrying in prayer the burdens of the world in part, he suggests, because we see these burdens in terms of issues rather than praying to a 'personal God who loves us and hears us'. 'Life becomes an unbearable burden whenever we lose touch with the presence of a loving Savior and see only hunger to be alleviated, injustice to be addressed, violence to be overcome, wars to be stopped and loneliness to be removed'. Nouwen suggests that burdens can be lightened because Jesus in his death 'gathered up the human sufferings of all times and places' and destroyed its fatal power. Near the conclusion Nouwen reminds us that 'Prayer is leading every sorrow to the source of all healing...'. Nouwen believes that missionaries will find support in knowing they are prayed for and that the people who pray will be part of 'the new and joyful task of participating in God's great work of salvation'.

The first prayer is identified as taken from Henri Nouwen's book: 'A Cry For Mercy'. This prayer asks God to help the person praying to know that no sin is too great to be forgiven. It recognizes the gift of Jesus' life and his death that was for all. The writer asks simply to stand before such a gift in humility on this day of Good Friday. The second prayer is also identified as taken from 'A Cry for Mercy' and speaks about the awe and joy and also the fear felt by the women who came to Jesus' tomb. The writer identifies with these feelings and asks God for the ability to see what is happening to him each day.

Nouwen begins by stating, 'The spirituality of liberation is deeply rooted in the lived experience of God's presence in history'. Nouwen then writes that Gutierrez believes liberation theology cannot be reduced to a political movement nor is it a 'theological rationale for a class struggle'. Nouwen states that Jesus is the center of the movement and Jesus loves both the oppressed and the oppressor. Nouwen reiterates a theme he has spoken of before that the spiritual well-being of the Americas, north and south are tied together and that the 'inflamed' cord of Central America that binds them together is reminding us that there is a deep spiritual crisis that involves the whole of the Americas. He concludes, ' In the name of millions of the nameless poor, Gustavo Gutierrez reaches out a hand to us and calls us to open our hearts again to the life-giving Spirit of Jesus...'

May 11, 1985, Vol. 152, No. 18, pp. 387 – 390. Nouwen begins the article by asking, 'To whom do we belong– the world... or God and God's people'? He then goes on to state that during a recent 30 day retreat he found himself 'drawn into [the] mysterious intimacy [of the icon] and came to know by heart its urgent invitation to belong to God'. Nouwen first writes of his impression of the eyes of the Virgin in the icon. He sees the eyes as gazing 'upon the infinite spaces of the heart where joy and sorrow are no longer contrasting emotions, but are transcended in spiritual unity'. Nouwen then describes the hands of the Virgin as leading the viewer to Jesus. After the hands Nouwen moves to the child as portrayed in the icon. 'The tender embrace of this mother and Child is far from a sentimental event. It is the portrayal of the mysterious interchange between God and humanity made possible by the Incarnation of the Word'. Nouwen concludes the article by suggesting that the icon portrays what it means to belong to God.

F4-9-1-1680	Item - Creating true intimacy: solidarity among the people of God June 1985 5 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 5 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Creating True Intimacy: Solidarity among the People of God', published in Sojourners, Vol. 14, No. 6, June 6, 1985, pp. 14 – 18. This is the first part of a 3 part series. Nouwen begins the article by writing of the ubiquitous reality of fear in the world and reminds the reader of Jesus' words, 'Do not be afraid'. Nouwen writes of the power of fear when he states, 'Fear can never give birth to love' and then asks, 'Are we so unused to living without fear that we have become unable to hear the voice of love?'. Nouwen then suggests that there is an invitation to us from Jesus to leave the house of fear and live in the house of love. Throughout this article Nouwen writes of the work of Jean Vanier the founder of the l'Arche communities. It is Jean who spoke to Nouwen of 'the three essential qualities of a life together in the house of love: intimacy, fecundity and ecstasy'. This article Nouwen writes, is about Intimacy and includes the headings Intimacy and Fear, Intimacy and Love, Intimacy and Solidarity. Nouwen suggests that fear builds up walls which prevent intimacy: 'fear prevents us from forming an intimate community in which we can grow together, everyone in his or her own way'. Love on the other hand, is the 'true friend' of intimacy. Jesus is the home where we can live without fear and we can reach this home in part through prayer that opens our hearts. Nouwen then writes that though we tend to see intimacy as 'smallness, coziness' it is the source of solidarity. People 'come to the awareness that the intimacy of God's house excludes no one and includes everyone. They start to see that the home they found in their innermost being is as wide as the whole of humanity'. Again, speaking of the work of Jean Vanier, Nouwen concludes by stating, 'The intimacy of the house of love always leads to solidarity with the weak'.

Nouwen begins this article about prayer by writing of his own and our, resistance to prayer. He asks 'Why this attraction and repulsion at the same time? Why do we have so many difficulties in doing what we say we fervently desire?' He goes on to identify a number of 'reasons' we might articulate for not praying. Nouwen then suggests that we have a God who constantly calls to us, constantly desires our attention. 'I am deeply convinced that the necessity to pray, and to pray unceasingly, is not so much based on our desire for God as on God's desire for us. It is God's passionate pursuit of us that calls us to prayer'. Nouwen identifies fear of the implications of prayer as our biggest reason for resistance. Nouwen writes about who he believes God really is for us and who Jesus and the Holy Spirit are and the gift that they are. Nouwen reminds us that we need not be afraid of them. Nouwen concludes 'So, do not be afraid of the Father who created you in love, nor of the Son who set you free to journey to the Father's house, nor of the Holy Spirit who already gives you the joy and peace of God's dwelling place'.

This is part two of a three part series. Nouwen begins the article by speaking of the life-giving quality of fecundity in a world that seldom appears to experience that. Nouwen follows this with a section entitled, Fecundity and Fear. Here Nouwen identifies sterility and productivity as possible manifestations of a fearful approach to life-giving forces and fecundity. 'In our contemporary society, with its emphasis on accomplishment and success, we often live as if being productive is the same as being fruitful'. In this section Nouwen writes of his experience with Jean Vanier and the people of L'Arche who showed him the life-giving gift of people who appear to 'accomplish' little. In the next section Nouwen writes of Fecundity and Love. He identifies three aspects of the fruitful life as 'vulnerability, gratitude and love' and discusses each in detail. Nouwen concludes the article with the section entitled: Fecundity and Mission. Here he begins by stating, 'When we come to experience intimacy with God as including all of humanity, it will become clear that fecundity also has a global quality'. Nouwen goes on to say, 'One of the most compelling aspects of the Spirit of Jesus is that it always sends us forth to bring and receive the gifts of God to and from all peoples and nations'. Nouwen suggests that our world would be very different if we recognized that there is something for us to receive from others, not just to give to them. He concludes the article by saying 'If giving and receiving the fruits of the intimate love of God for all people were our main concern, peace would be near'.

Nouwen begins by identifying the contrast between being deaf to what we do not want to hear and being willing to listen. He states, 'Fear has always something to do with the unknown in us. 	Scope and content: This item is a 5 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Living in Joyful Ecstasy, The House of God a Home amid an anxious World', published in Sojourners, Vol. 14, No. 8, August/September 1985, pp. 27 – 31. This is part 3 of a three part series. Nouwen begins by stating that he does not believe ecstasy is simply for the mystical few but is in fact, for all Christian people. 'I consider it very important to reclaim the word 'ecstasy' for all Christian people who strive to move from the house of fear to the house of love'. Nouwen then points to Jesus emphasis that he has come to bring joy and that all are called to remain in that joy. Nouwen moves from this introduction to a section entitled, 'Ecstasy and Fear' and begins by stating that 'just as fear prevents intimacy and fecundity, so too it makes ecstasy impossible'. He suggests that fear makes us cling to routine, to sameness and fear of change. Nouwen speaks of the people of L'Arche with whom he spent time and notes both the presence of routine but also the journey from fear to joy.' If the world is a fearful place where you need all of your emotional energy just to survive, there is little capacity to move from one way of being alive to another... Where all has become fear, joy cannot be'. In the next section entitled, 'Ecstasy and Love' Nouwen points to the great difference between ephemeral happiness and deep joy. Deep joy is the joy of Jesus. It is a joy that holds both happiness and sorrow, good times and bad. '[Joy] is the solid ground from which new life can always burst forth'. In a final section entitled, 'A New International Order' Nouwen moves on to write of the fears that are causing nations to build barriers and to fight battles rather than seek reconciliation and peace. He points to Jesus' call to 'the nations' as well as to individual people. Nouwen notes the situations in Central and South America as places in which fear has brought nations almost to the brink of nuclear war. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'The word "ecstasy" has opened a new perspective on joy as an essential element of a truly Christian spirituality. It is the constant moving away from the static places of death into the place where life can be recognized and celebrated'.

Nouwen begins the article by citing a visit to an exclusive preparatory school where everyone seemed polite, intelligent and good mannered. However, at some point they all watched a film containing great deal of violence which was obviously entertaining to the young audience. Nouwen points to 'the fact that a large portion of contemporary entertainment is fascinated with violence and death'. Nouwen then goes on to write of the various ways in which human beings live death which includes hatred, fear, judgment of others, desire to destroy what we fear. By judging others Nouwen suggests we play God but 'everyone who plays God ends up acting as the demon'. Nouwen goes on to state that the peacemaker never plays God, never judges but sees others as fellow sinners and fellow saints. He suggests that, 'As peacemakers we must have the courage to see the powers of death at work even in our innermost selves'. Nouwen points to our need to see ourselves as forgiven people rather than living in self-hatred which brings depression and fear and a form of death. In contrast to death Nouwen suggests that 'Life mean mobility and change. Wherever there is life there is movement and growth'. Nouwen concludes by stating that 'real resistance [to death] requires the humble confession that we are partners in the evil we seek to resist'.

It is indicated that this is part 1 of a 3 part series entitled: A Spirituality of Peacemaking. Nouwen opens the article by asking, 'Must it remain this way? Must war drums constantly disturb us? Must we hear over and over that we need more and stronger weapons to safeguard our values and our lives?'. Nouwen goes on to describe his own struggle from hesitation to describe himself as a peacemaker to an understanding of the need to do so. Nouwen states, 'I hope to show how peacemaking can no longer be regarded as peripheral to being a Christian'. 'Christians today ... have to find the courage to make the word peace as important as the word freedom'. Nouwen then goes on at some length to speak about the peacemaker as one who prays. 'Prayer is the beginning and the end, the source and the fruit, the core and the content, the basis and the goal of all peacemaking'. Nouwen describes peace as a divine gift which is received in prayer. It is in prayer, he suggests, that we find ourselves part of wounded humanity, one like those who create war. 'Only when we are willing repeatedly to confess that we too have dirty hands even when we work for peace, can we fully understand the hard task of peacemaking'. Nouwen references the gospels and the words of Jesus about the prayer of the peacemaker and the receipt of the gift of love in the relationship with Jesus that comes from prayer. 'Nothing is more important in peacemaking than that it flows from a deep and undeniable experience of love'. Nouwen describes prayer as 'the first and foremost act of resistance against the arms race'. Nouwen concludes by referencing a story from one of the desert fathers and by stating, ' When we can see our own sinful self in a tranquil mirror and confess that we too are warmakers, then we may be ready to start walking humbly on the road to peace'.

This article is identified as 'a portion of three articles by Henri from a series entitled 'The House of God: A Home amid and anxious world' published in Sojourners Magazine, June, July and August-September, 1985. Nouwen begins the article by saying, 'The words we most need to hear during these turbulent days are: "Do not be afraid". These words from the Gospels are then followed by a list of some of the major fearful preoccupations of people in our time. Nouwen writes about how fear permeates so much of daily living and suggests that 'Many of us Western people of the 20th century live in the house of fear'. He suggests that Jesus, when asked questions based in fear moved to 'transform the question' to a different level. Nouwen then asks, 'Is it possible to live in the house of love and to listen to the questions raised there by the Lord of love?' He identifies the 'house of love' not as a distant, hoped-for heaven but in Jesus, now, who is our home. 'This is conversion: coming home. And this is what prayer is about: seeking our home where the Lord has built a home – in the intimacy of our own heart'. The fruits of this conversion as Nouwen sees it are: Intimacy, fecundity and ecstasy. Being in the home of Jesus is learning intimacy and trust which exclude no one; the fecundity that arises from this becomes 'global', for everyone. Nouwen finally, suggests that 'complete joy is the reward of the fruitful life in the house of God. Ecstasy is this complete joy'. Nouwen completes this thought by suggesting that this joy, this fecundity can make nations less defensive and fearful and more inclusive.

It is identified as Part II of a three part series. Nouwen begins by speaking of his experience of the Jewish holocaust when he was a child in Holland and of his awareness of the questions asked after, how could we let this happen? Nouwen realizes that now he is a well-educated adult and cannot claim that he does not see the horrors of the current nuclear threat or the injustices of American and other societies. He goes on to state, 'Peacemaking is not an option any longer but a holy obligation for all people whatever their professional or family situation. Peacemaking is a way of living that involves our whole being all the time.' Nouwen continues to write about the nuclear threat of the annihilation of the world as we know it; the way in which people who oppose it are treated unjustly; the way in which we enter into an 'all pervasive fascination with death that is an integral part of our daily lives.' Nouwen describes what he sees as the reality that 'violence [is] mental before it is physical'. He writes that when we refuse to see others who are different as our brothers and sisters that is the beginning of future violence and death. He goes on to say, 'I am moved by the idea that a peacemaker never judges anybody' and that we become better peacemakers when we are able to forgive ourselves and others for our humanity. Nouwen then suggests, 'Peacemaking requires clear resistance to death in all its manifestations...Real resistance requires the humble confession that we are partners in the evil that we seek to resist'.

Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'A peacemaker prays. Prayer is the beginning and the end, the source and the fruit, the core and the content, the basis and the goal of all peacemaking'. At the end of his introduction Nouwen goes on to say, 'Praying at all times is the first aspect of peacemaking. What does this concretely mean for us who have barely enough time and space to keep some distance from the cares of life? To answer this question we must be first willing to explore critically the ways in which the "cares of life" strangle us. Only then can we see the converting power of prayer and its pervasive role in peacemaking'. In the following sections Nouwen writes of 'wounds and needs' which affect our actions and suggests that it is 'only when we are willing to repeatedly confess that we too have dirty hands, even when we work for peace, can we fully understand the hard task of peacemaking'. Nouwen then begins to write of the power of prayer to free us to be peacemakers and uses images from the Bible to point to this power. Nouwen identifies peacemaking as a work of love and goes on to say, 'Prayer is the way to that experience of love'. Nouwen writes of his experience as a child in wartime Holland of the holocaust of the Jews and states that as a child he could not understand or fight against it but now he is an educated adult he cannot excuse himself from fighting injustice that he sees. 'To work for peace is to work for life. But more than ever before in history we are surrounded by the powers of death'. Further on Nouwen states that 'resistance [to evil] is no longer an option' whatever the cost. We do this to begin with by recognizing the evil within ourselves and yet forgiving ourselves and others. 'Personally, I believe that the battle against these suicidal inner powers is harder than any other spiritual battle. If those who believe in Jesus Christ were able fully to believe that they are forgiven people, who are loved unconditionally and called to proclaim peace in the name of the forgiving Lord, our planet would not be on the verge of self-destruction'.

This item is identified as being Part III of a series entitled, 'A Spirituality of Peacemaking'. Nouwen begins by reminding the reader that in a previous part he discussed the need for us to say 'No' to death. He then goes on to say 'Resisting the forces of death is only meaningful when we are fully in touch with the forces of life we want to uphold'. Nouwen writes that it is more powerful to work for the forces of life than to face directly, the forces of death into which we may be drawn and unable to resist. Nouwen writes of the need of the Peacemaker to work with the forces of life which is a gentle, vulnerable force in order to resist death. Nouwen writes at length about resistance and suggests that there are three aspects of life that are important to one who is a resister, a peacemaker: humility, compassion and joy. Nouwen then discusses at length these three aspects of life. Nouwen concludes this section by stating, 'Thus the "No" to death can only be fruitful when spoken and acted out in the context of a humble, compassionate, and joyful "yes" to life. Resistance becomes a truly spiritual task only when the "no" to death and the "yes" to life are never separated'. In the last part of the article Nouwen writes of demonstrations of peaceful resistance that he has experienced and about which he expresses a certain level of ambivalence. Nouwen speaks of the peacemaker's need for prayer and concludes the article by stating, 'It is hard for me to see how resistance can be fruitful unless it deepens and strengthens our relationship with God. Prayer and resistance, the twin pillars of Christian peacemaking, are two interlocking ways of giving expression to the peace we have found in the dwelling place of God'.

Nouwen begins this meditation on the icon by stating, 'To see Christ is to see God and all of humanity. This mystery has evoked in me a burning desire to see the face of Jesus'. Nouwen then relates this to his love of the face of Christ as portrayed by Rublev in this icon. Nouwen begins by describing the damage to this 15thC image and then describes what he sees as a 'tender human face' and the colors 'of inexpressible beauty' which are used. The next focus for Nouwen are the eyes of Christ: 'Their gaze is so mysterious and deep that any word that tries to describe them is inadequate'. Nouwen concludes the meditation by stating, 'Seeing the Christ by Rublev is a profound event...seeing Christ leads us to the heart of God as well as to the heart of all that is human'. In an Afterword, Nouwen discusses the icon painting tradition and notes that beginning in the 6th C. there is a tendency to portray the face of Christ in a similar way in all icons and in a way which may be related to the face on the Shroud of Turin which may have been the actual face of Christ.

This item is identified as Part II of a three part series previously published in the New Oxford Review. Nouwen begins by describing his childhood experience in Holland of the holocaust and the questions he had about why people didn't act. He then writes of his own struggle now with the growth of the nuclear position of the United States. Nouwen reminds himself that now, as an educated, mature adult he can never say 'I didn't know what was going on'. Nouwen then writes of his awareness that the nation he now lives in, the United States, is now a nuclear nation that threatens other nations. 'It is obvious that all who believe that God is a God of life, especially we who proclaim that Jesus Christ came to live among us to overcome the powers of death, must say a clear and unambiguous 'no'. Nouwen concludes by stating that 'resistance is no longer an option...non resistance makes us accomplices to a nuclear holocaust...'

This article is a reflection on Andrei Rublev's icon, The Descent of the Holy Spirit' a Russian icon painted toward the end of the 15th C. Nouwen writes that he is sharing the results of his prolonged reflection on this icon. Nouwen first stresses that he sees that 'God reveals the fullness of divine love first of all in community' rather than relying just on the individual. Nouwen says that he intends to show in more detail, three aspects of the spiritual life as he sees this in the icon. The first heading he entitles: 'The God Within' and it results from the quietude he sees in the grouping in the icon as contrasted with usual Pentecostal activity in much art. 'The Pentecost icon is such a masterpiece precisely because it draws us into the heart of the mystery of God's self-revelation'. The second heading he entitles: 'The community of Faith' and here he begins 'The Spirit within, the Spirit of the God of love, the Spirit of the Living Christ is the Holy Spirit who creates a new community among those who believe'. The third heading he entitles: 'Liberating the World'. This part is reflecting on the figure at the bottom of the icon in what seems to be a dark cave. Here Nouwen believes that that leads into the need of the community to go out to the world to bring the light and love of the Spirit. Nouwen concludes 'The Descent of the Holy Spirit is a door that leads us into the mystery of God's inner life'.

Nouwen opens this article on prayer by relating a story of his own resistance to praying and that of others. He asks what it is that keeps us from praying and identifies fear as the most important factor. Nouwen believes that this fear comes from some underlying awareness of the kind of God we have. 'Prayer means letting God's creative love touch the most hidden places of our being, and letting Jesus' way of the cross, his way of downward mobility, truly become our way'. Nouwen continues the article by saying we must not be afraid of God, we must not be afraid of Jesus and we must not be afraid of the Holy Spirit.

The article is identified as the first installment of a series of articles taken from a Nouwen diary written during his time as priest-in-residence at L'Arche, Trosley-Breuil, France. The excerpts from Nouwen's diary in this article begin August 13, 1985 and end September 24. In the first entry Nouwen describes this as 'the first day of my new life! Nouwen writes of meeting Madame Vanier, of his leaving Harvard, his new quarters and his sense of how different this life is from his very busy life in academia. The entries that follow include reflections on how Jean Vanier began L'Arche with Pere Thomas Phillipe, Nouwen's longing to be able to live a simpler life, his gratitude for the prayerful support of his friends, his hurt and anger when a friend fails to visit him. Nouwen speaks of his daily time spent in the Oratory at Trosly: 'In many ways the Oratoire is the heart of l'Arche...every time I enter the Oratoire I feel a deep rest coming over me...' Nouwen also speaks of one of the foyers he visits which is called La Forestiere where the most severely handicapped live. Further entries speak of the people he meets and include his reflections on their lives.

The article is identified as the second installment of a series of articles taken from a Nouwen diary written during his time as priest-in-residence at L'Arche, Trosley-Breuil, France. The excerpts from Nouwen's diary in this article begin October 17, 1985 and end November 26. The first two entries focus on Pere Thomas' response to Nouwen's concern about his need for affection. He said Pere Thomas speaks about trust in human relationships and the 'heart as the deepest source of the spiritual life...' Nouwen writes of a visit from some friends and an experience at Mass with 3 handicapped men who were the altar servers. There are then more reflections on the mystical life, about the need for a new kind of religious order that will focus on peace, a new kind of ministry Nouwen sees he needs for the Assistants at L'Arche, his failure as he sees it to pray often enough for the dead. Nouwen then writes at length about the visit of his friend Jonas, with whom he had been angry when he failed to come before. He and Jonas speak about their relationship but Nouwen also notes their different perceptions of l'Arche. Nouwen offers reflections on his tendency to give from his abundance, 'I see clearly how far I am from being like the two widows.(1Kings:17 – 26 and Mark 12: 41 – 44) I also realize that I cannot force myself to become like them. My spiritual task is to love God more each day, so that the many things that occupy my heart and mind will gradually lose their power over me'. Nouwen writes of a visit from Fr. George Strohmeier of Erie, Pa. L'Arche and concludes this articles entries with a reflection of Abraham's sacrifice of Issac.

This article is identified as a first of two on peacemaking. Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'A peacemaker prays. Prayer is the beginning and the end, the source and the fruit, the core and the content, the basis and the goal of all peacemaking'. Nouwen goes on to discuss the difficulty of many to find time for prayer and the very mixed motives we have even when we do good works. 'Why is it so hard to go beyond this strange moral exchange in which every good deed has a price attached it? Why is it that our needs often spoil even the most generous gesture?' Nouwen goes on to say that it is in prayer that we can come to know ourselves and to grow to be free from the self-deceit he speaks of. He warns of peacemaking based on fear or a need to know what others think of us. Nouwen says, ' Peacemaking is a work of love and love casts out fear'. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'Prayer – living in the presence of God – is the most radical peace action we can imagine'.

Nouwen opens the article by stating, ' As peacemakers we must have the courage to see the powers of death at work even in our innermost selves...'Nouwen speaks of that within us which does not accept ourselves and that this is 'one of the greatest enemies of the peacemaker'. Nouwen speaks of the central message of the Gospel which is that we are forgiven and this truth can help us overcome our fear of ourselves and of others. Nouwen writes of the need to resist, resist the forces of death and to affirm life. He speaks of the need for joy even in the face of pain. F4-9-1-1705	Item - Orthodox downward mobility or secularist prosperity?: the tragedy of Dutch Catholicism      November 1986      8 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is an 8 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Orthodox Downward Mobility or Secularist Prosperity?' published in the New Oxford Review, November 1986, pp.7 - 15. The article is identified as the third installment of a series of articles taken from a Nouwen diary written during his time as priest-in-residence at L'Arche, Trosley-Breuil, France. The excerpts from Nouwen's diary in this article begin December 2, 1985 and end January 5, 1986. Nouwen's entries begin with a description of his frustration with himself and how he uses his time; how he becomes so easily distracted from what may be more important things. He writes then, of talks given by Jean Vanier about living with the poor, being poor. Jean says, 'Jesus always leads us to littleness. It is the place where misery and mercy meet. It is the place where we encounter God'. Nouwen writes of a letter he receives which is a call from the L'Arche community at Daybreak in Canada to be their pastor and his realization that he had never been Called before, his life choices until then had been his. There is a short entry on the 'glory' of God; a longer entry about the celebration of Christmas at L'Arche and a certain distance Nouwen felt from it all. The remainder of the entries are about his visit to his family and friends in Holland; his sense of distance again, this time because so many have left the church and no longer really 'hear' what he wants to share. He describes a visit to his Bishop about going to Daybreak; the state of marriage as he experiences it among his friends; his father's 83rd birthday celebration. His final entry states, 'As I leave my country I feel powerless and sad. I also feel an inner desire to do something for my own people and church in Holland – somehow, sometime'.

Nouwen' published in The Christian Ministry, Vol. 18, No. 1, January 1987, p. 20. This item is a response to an article published in this same volume entitled: 'The Minister as Narrator' by John Robert McFarland in which the 'model' of the minister presented by Nouwen in 'The Wounded Healer' and that of James D. Glasse in 'Profession: Minister: Confronting the Identity Crisis of the Parish Clergy' is critically evaluated and found wanting. Nouwen responds by noting that his concept of wounded healer was simply 'an attempt to say something – not everything – about ministry'. Nouwen suggests that McFarland's ideas have merit and much to offer, 'if he does not try to offer too much'.	January 1987	1 p. of textual records
F4-9-1-1708	Item - A spirituality of waiting: being alert to God's presence in our lives  Note [General] : Tapes of this material are available from Ave Maria Press. Card from Ave Maria Press - source of periodical - is attached to front cover. Scope and content: This item is a 12 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled: 'A Spirituality of Waiting: Being Alert to God's presence in our Lives', published in Weavings, January/February 1987, pp. 6 – 17. Nouwen begins by suggesting two aspects of waiting: waiting for God and the waiting of God. Nouwen identifies these two aspects of waiting found first in the beginning of Luke's Gospel and then, at the end of Luke's Gospel. In the first section Nouwen points out how hard it is for most of us to wait; that waiting is considered as wasting time. He then points to the people in Luke's Gospel who are waiting: Zechariah and Elizabeth, Mary, Simeon and Anna. Nouwen then discusses 1) the nature of waiting as waiting with a sense of promise and 2) waiting as active. In the scripture the figures he writes of are waiting for the fulfilment of a promise and they are waiting very actively. 'The secret of waiting is the faith that the seed has been planted, that something has begun. Active waiting means to be present fully to the moment, in the conviction that something is happening where you are and that you want to be present of it'. Nouwen also describes a waiting person as a patient person. In a section on the practice of waiting Nouwen describes the need we have of community and mutual support along with an alertness to the word. Nouwen then looks at the waiting found in the last part of Luke's Gospel, in the passion of Jesus. Nouwen states that this material is outlined in a book by W.H. Vanstone called 'The Stature of Waiting'. Nouwen begins by describing the concerns of a friend who was dying of cancer and didn't see how to live the passivity of his life. The remainder of the article enlarges on the idea by Vanstone that Jesus moved from action to passion, losing control of his life and waiting and allowing it to happen. Jesus and God are waiting to see how people will respond, how we will respond and they do not have control over that. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'If it is true that God in Jesus Christ is waiting for our response to divine love then we can discover a whole new perspective on how to wait in life'.	January - February 1987	12 p. of textual records

F4-9-1-1709	Item - Christ's simultaneous absence &amp; presence: tasting the sweetness of the Lord January - February 1987 4 p. of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 4 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'Christ's Simultaneous Absence and Presence', published in the New Oxford Review, Vol. LIV, No. 1, January/February 1987, pp. 4 – 7. This item is part 5 of a 10 part series which are entries from a diary written by Nouwen during his stay at L'Arche, Trosly-Breuil, France , 1985 – 86. The first entry for February 9 is written from Freiburg and Nouwen is describing his visit to the Munster and a painting of the crowning of Mary. Nouwen finds the painting has lost touch with Mary as the poor and humble servant of the gospel. Nouwen also writes of need for Protestant and Catholic to continue the careful listening they are trying to do now. The next entry, a week later, and Lent has begun. Nouwen writes of his difficulty with fasting but his need for it. 'I hope and pray that fasting will drive the demons away, and give me a clearer eye for the presence of the One in whose absence I fast'. The next day Nouwen is again at the Munster, at first standing in the snowy empty square outside and then within, where he goes to confession and walks home 'with a heart full of peace'. The next day is a visit with his friends Franz, Reny and Robert Johnas to Colmar for Mass. The next two entries are reflections on the Gospel of the day, Matthew 25 on the need to serve Jesus in the 'least' 'where is hidden the real joy and peace my heart searches for'. And the gospel which speaks of making peace with people you are at odds with. The last entry, dated February indicates Nouwen has returned to L'Arche and is a reflection on suffering.

This item is number 6 in a series of 10 articles from a diary kept by Nouwen while he was at L'Arche Trosley-Breuil, France, 1985-6. The entries begin February 28, 1986 and the first three are Nouwen's reflections on a book by James Bentley entitled, 'Secrets of Mount Sinai'. This book as Nouwen recounts it , covers the story of German scripture scholar, Tischendorf's finding and removal of the Codex Sinaiticus from the Monastery of St Catherine. Nouwen finds the attitude of Tischendorf to the monks disdainful. Nouwen then follows with some thoughts related to the different endings of Mark's gospel, about the resurrection of the body, Bentley's reflection that he did not believe this and Nouwen's own thoughts. In the last two entries Nouwen describes his feelings of being busy with nothing being accomplished and his sense of disconnection. The last entry is dated, March 11, 1986.

John Dear, Orbis Books, Maryknoll, N.Y., 1998 Scope and content: This item is a 4 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, ' The Journey from Despair to Hope' published in Praying by the National Catholic Reporter Publishing Company, No. 17, Mar-Apr. 1987, pp. 4 – 7. Nouwen begins the article by stating that Jesus, from the place of despair in death, speaks to us not of optimism or pessimism but hope. Nouwen identifies three levels of despair current in human life: 'in interpersonal relationships, in global ways throughout the planet and in our church'. Nouwen goes on to say, ' I want to look at each of these ways of despair and then, drawing upon the hope Jesus offers us, try to say a word of hope in response'. In the first area of interpersonal despair Nouwen suggests that we tend to find relationships so often unsatisfactory, people cannot love us in a way that fulfills our deep need. Nouwen suggests that we have forgotten 'the first love' which is God's love for us and that is our hope. 'Freedom comes when you know with your heart that you are loved'. In the second level Nouwen points to our despair with the global situation and his sense that we almost prefer death to life in uncertainty. 'But Jesus says "no" to death'. Nouwen states that we need to live without judgment, trusting in life. 'Life is basically hidden. It is small and begs for constant care and protection. If you are committed to always saying "yes" to life, you are going to have to become a person who chooses it when it is hidden'. With regard to the third level of despair: in the church, Nouwen identifies this as particularly hard to bear but suggests that 'we are called to be a community. We are called to be together, in a fellowship of the weak to proclaim Jesus as Lord'.

This item is taken from Henri Nouwen's L'Arche journals. Nouwen begins by saying that he had gone to Pere Thomas for spiritual direction, asking for help with his hunger for affection. Nouwen then tries to understand the two hour response he received. Pere Thomas began by identifying our 'highly psychologized culture [in which] affection has become the central concern'. We feel worthy or not, depending upon other's response and we become prevented from reaching an inner place of healing which Thomas sees as the heart. Nouwen discusses Thomas' perception of the mystical life, not as a place for the accomplished spiritual person but as God with us from the beginning of our lives. The heart then ' is much wider and deeper than our affections, It is before and beyond the distinctions between sorrow and joy, anger and lust, fear and love. It is the place where all is one in God, the place where we truly belong'.

Nouwen begins this item by stating, 'Keep your eyes on the prince of peace...who is the source of all peace'. Nouwen identifies the place where peace is found then as in weakness, 'in those places of our heart where we feel most broken, most insecure, most in agony, most afraid'. Nouwen speaks of the darkness in which many live and the Light which dispels the darkness. He ends with a story from an old Hasidic tale about determining the hour of dawn...'It is then, ...when you can look into the face of human beings and you have enough light in you to recognize them as your brothers and sisters'.

This article is taken from a talk given by Henri Nouwen in March 1987 to Baltimore CALC's March Conference 'Responding in Faith as the Americas Meet'. Nouwen begins by describing a recent visit to the L'Arche community in Sujappa Honduras where he met Raphael a man who was deeply handicapped. 'I wondered what this silent and completely dependent, handicapped young man was telling me about the Central American conflict and the Christian response to it'. Nouwen then describes the various Central American points of conflict and suggests that he understood Raphael to be, in his powerlessness, revealing a new meaning to Jesus' words 'Hold your ground before the Son of Man'. "His broken crucified body warned me never to surrender to fear, to pray unceasingly and to act faithfully...'. Nouwen then goes on to speak in the section entitled Prayer about prayer as the way to keep hearts focused and united. Nouwen speaks of the injustice involving the Indian people of Central America, the presence of what he calls the 'descending Christ' among them and the importance of prayer as being rooted in him before being able to act. In the section entitled Action, Nouwen first points to much action which seems to have achieved nothing. Nouwen then identifies as being most Christian that action which comes from 'the place of forgiveness, reconciliation, community and compassion'. Nouwen then points to the importance of action having the quality of being able to receive, which is about recognizing the gifts of all. Nouwen also points to the importance of action as needing to be communal, of the whole Christian community, of the church. Nouwen concludes: ' By speaking about prayer and action in response to the Central American reality, I have tried to restate concretely the Christian call to be in the world without belonging to it, to work for peace and justice while never losing touch with the One in whom we find our identity, to say "No" to the power of death while staying truly alive, to act courageously while praying confidently'.

This is an excerpt from Nouwen's diaries written during his year at L'Arche Trosley Breuil, France. The entries begin March 15, 1986 and end April 7, 1986 with gaps. In his first entry Nouwen is reflecting on the gospel of the day; the story of Nicodemus and his struggle to both do the right thing and be respected by his peers. Nouwen writes of that same struggle in his own life. In the second entry Nouwen reflects on Jean Vanier's statement that L'Arche is built upon the body not the word. Nouwen then discusses his resistance to that but concludes with the question, 'I wonder when and how I will learn fully to live the incarnation.' In the third and fourth entries Nouwen reflects upon the covenant retreat that he has experienced. Following these is an entry talking about Jesus' wounds in his resurrected body and Nouwen writes, 'Thus I proclaim that my wounds are not causes for embarrassment, but the source of a joyful acknowledgement of my unique vocation to journey with Jesus through suffering to the glory of God'. The next entry, probably written for Easter Sunday 1986 reflects on our need to be able to speak of the risen Lord. The final entry is about the arrival of his friend Charles Bush.

Nouwen briefly discusses his journey to the L'Arche community of Daybreak at Richmond Hill, On. He describes his time at Yale and Harvard and his sense that 'I wasn't living fully what I was speaking about'. Nouwen speaks of his contact with Jean Vanier and his eventual decision to try to live the community life of L'Arche.

This item is 8th in a series of articles reflecting on the year Nouwen spent at L'Arche, Trosley Breuil, France in 1985/6. Marthe Robin was a French woman born in 1902 and died in 1981, who was considered by many to have extraordinary spiritual experiences. She has been said to have influenced the lives of many people through her spiritual advice and way of living. The entries in this article focus entirely on his visit to the house and room where Marthe Robin lived and died. The entries are dated April 13, 1986 - April 19. Nouwen reflects and prays, with his friend Bernard, in her room on several occasions and speaks about the influence of Marthe on many people and especially on Pere George Finet, the founder of the Foyers de Charite.

This item is the ninth installment in a series of articles reflecting on the year Nouwen spent at L'Arche, Trosley Breuil, France, 1985/6. The items in this installment cover dates from April 26 – May 22, 1986. The first two entries are reflections on the day's gospel readings: asking in Jesus' name and Jesus as the vine and the pruning of the branches. Nouwen speaks of the suffering of the pruning process 'but they need to be cut away so that more fruit can grow'. He goes on to say, 'The great challenge is to continue to recognize God's pruning hand in my life'. The next item is written on Ascension day and Nouwen writes of the way this L'Arche community celebrates it. He describes the key points of a talk given by Jean Vanier on peacemaking. Nouwen then speaks of his busyness and yet his sense that he is accomplishing nothing. The remaining items cover a trip he then made to Boston, New York, Pittsburgh and Washington to visit friends and to give talks. Nouwen writes of the stress and anxiety he experiences in his friends and his desire that they should see another way of living that he himself has found in L'Arche. Nouwen meets in this trip some he calls 'the rich and the powerful' including Murray McDonnell in New York and members of the United States Senate in Washington and their thirst to hear about Jesus, 'Give us a word from God, speak to us about Jesus...do not stay away from the rich who are so poor...'. Nouwen in one entry reflects on what 'welcoming a little child in my name means'. Finally, Nouwen writes of being asked to give the commencement address at a Presbyterian Seminary. When he speaks with the seminarians he is surprised to hear them speaking more like professional businessmen than ministers. 'When I asked them how important Jesus was for them, they said there was a tendency to speak more about God than about Jesus'. Nouwen determines that he will speak of Jesus in his address. At the commencement ceremony Nouwen meets two old friends, Fred Rogers also known as Mr Rogers and John Fife a co-founder of the sanctuary movement.

This item is part 10 and the final installment of a series of articles written during the year that Nouwen was resident at L'Arche, Trosly-Breuil , France. The items date from May 31, 1986 to July 6, 1986. The first entry describes a visit Henri and a friend make to the Castro district of San Francisco, a gay area. He writes of seeing the fearful, lonely faces of men struggling with the awareness of AIDS. Nouwen concludes the entry stating that his friend commented, 'I am glad you came. There are too few people who mention his Name in the district. There are so many negative associations with his Name and still he is the greatest source of hope.' The next entry describes his visit to Los Angeles and the atmosphere of what he describes as 'the enormous superficiality of our culture'. Nouwen then flies to Madison, Wisconsin for a visit with Parker and Sally Palmer to discuss theological education and a possible one-week summer institute for seminary professors. Palmer and Nouwen discuss the need for theological students to have spiritual help, not to separate theology and spirituality. Nouwen notes that: 'the study of theology must have the quality of prayer; theological study must also foster the creation of communities of faith... and finally, the study of theology must always lead to witness'. The final three entries are written when Nouwen returns to France and finds himself assessing his year there. He writes of wanting to share with Nathan but having to wait to do that, he notes that he feels scattered and finds it hard to pray for an hour in the morning, he is not sleeping well and feels 'somewhat indifferent' but not depressed. Nouwen realizes that he has not really got to know the handicapped people as well as he hoped. In the last entry Nouwen notes that he is leaving Trosly, will visit his family, go to Boston and then on to Daybreak for a three year commitment. He notes three graces from his time at L'Arche: being in Europe again, renewing and making friendships, and beginning to make a deeper contact with the handicapped.

This publication was a special issue devoted to the l'Arche Federation Meeting, Rome, May, 1987. Nouwen begins his article by stating how irritating he first found a common l'Arche expression: 'l'Arche is given to the world'. Nouwen believed that such a phrase 'had an insane ring to it'. The remainder of the article goes on to deal with the following statement: ' How is our small daily, routine life at l'Arche connected with our immense world, groaning in labour pains, eagerly waiting to be set free? I propose to look for a response to this question in the resurrection stories as we find them in the four gospels'. Nouwen then divides his comments in three sections: The Stranger, The Intimate Friend and The Teacher. In The Stranger Nouwen speaks of the hiddenness of Jesus' life, death and resurrection, how he comes to his disciples after his death as at first, a stranger and the disciples both knew and didn't know him. Nouwen tells the story of Adam Arnett who lives in his house and then speaks of the hidden quality of all suffering: 'Only by acknowledging this hidden suffering that bonds our heart with the heart of all human beings can we become truly compassionate people... In The Intimate Friend Nouwen states, 'The stranger reveals himself to us as the most intimate friend'. Nouwen goes on to suggest that our lives are built on deep personal relationships and not, for instance, issues. Nouwen then relates the story of the growth of his relationship with Bill in his community and concludes by saying, 'l'Arche is there to remind us that the intimate personal relationships developed over months and years of faithfulness allow us to be in the world without being destroyed by its countless urgencies and emergencies'. In the section entitled The Teacher Nouwen states, ' Jesus teaches his disciples that suffering and death are no longer connected with sin and punishment, but with the glory of God...It is hard to grasp the revolutionary character of this teaching. Nouwen notes that 'l'Arche teaches the possibility of a suffering that leads to glory. Finally, Nouwen concludes 'As people of l'Arche , people of the resurrection, our small daily lives must be connected to the great struggles of our contemporary world'.

This is a series of excerpts from the diary of Henri Nouwen from the year he spent at L'Arche, Trosly Breuil, France in 1985/6. The entries in this article focus entirely on his visit to the house and room where Marthe Robin lived and died. Nouwen reflects and prays, with his friend Bernard, in her room on several occasions and speaks about the influence of Marthe on many people and especially on Père George Finet, the founder of the Foyers de Charité. Nouwen and his friend also visit the main Foyer de Charité and Fr. Finet in Chateauneuf de Galaure, France, also the place where Marthe Robin lived her life of prayer and suffering.

This item is a short excerpt from Henri Nouwen's 'Out of Solitude'. Nouwen begins by asking, 'What does it mean to care?' Nouwen then writes of the ambiguous ways in which the word 'care' is often used and the root meaning 'Kara, which means lament'. Nouwen states, 'Real care is not ambiguous. Real care excludes indifference and is the opposite of apathy'. Nouwen writes of different kinds of care and states, 'The friend who cares makes it clear that whatever happens in the external world, being present to each other is what really matters. In fact, it matters more than pain, illness, or even death'.

It is a quote from New Oxford Review, November 1986. The entire excerpt reads: 'I realized that songs, good feelings, beautiful liturgies, nice presents, big dinners, and many sweet words do not make Christmas. Christmas is saying 'yes' to something beyond all emotions and feelings. Christmas is saying 'yes' to a hope based on God's initiative, which has nothing to do with what I think or feel. Christmas is believing that the salvation of the world is God's work, and not mine'.

Nouwen begins by suggesting that the 'vocation of the Christian [is] a vocation to solitude and intimacy'. Nouwen goes on to suggest that this vocation 'finds a very powerful and unique expression in the family'. In the first section entitled 'The Vocation of Solitude' Nouwen writes that it is in solitude 'that we discover the inner space where our creativity finds its roots and from which our real vitality springs'. Nouwen suggests that rather valuing ourselves or others by what we do, it is in solitude that we will, through the Holy Spirit, find our true selves and be able therefore, to value others. 'Therefore, the first gift of family members to each other is the gift of solitude in which they can discover their real selves'. 'When there is no solitude in a family, when there are no private times and private places, then family life becomes such a filled up, busy, restless life that it can no longer be home, the place from which we move and to which we return'. In the second and final section entitled, 'The Vocation of Intimacy' Nouwen writes that the gift of solitude makes the gift of intimacy possible, an intimacy which is not possessive but nurturing. This applies, Nouwen suggests, both to the relationships between parents and children and also that between husband and wife.

Nouwen introduces the article by describing his move from the intellectual atmosphere of Harvard to the l'Arche community for the mentally handicapped at Daybreak. Nouwen writes of the atmosphere of loving equality at his house and then begins to write of Adam Arnett for whom Nouwen had some responsibility. Nouwen describes Adam as a totally dependent man who could not speak nor care for himself and who suffered daily with grand mal seizures. Nouwen describes his own apprehension at being asked to take early morning and evening responsibility for Adam. As he began to know Adam however, Nouwen says, 'Out of this broken body and broken mind emerged a most beautiful human being offering me a greater gift than I would ever be able to offer him'. Nouwen uses the remainder of the article to write of Adam's role as a man of peace, a peacemaker. 'Adam's peace is first of all a peace rooted in being'. Nouwen compares this with the desire of many people to strive for success and for self-worth rather than accepting much more just 'to be'. Nouwen writes of the importance of the heart over the mind; of the heart as the center of our being where God is. Nouwen writes of the ways in which Adam helps to create community among all those who are committed to his care. As Nouwen concludes the article he writes of Jesus, the Prince of Peace ; Jesus whose peace is found in weakness. Nouwen then goes on to speak of the larger international world, 'I am only saying that the seeds of national and international peace are already sown on the soil of our own suffering and the suffering of the poor, and that we truly can trust that these seeds, like the mustard seeds of the gospel, will produce large shrubs in which many birds can find a place to rest.'

Some of these excerpts have appeared in Nouwen's Road to Daybreak, published in 1988 and are written during his time at l'Arche Trosley Breuil in France. The mediations begin with Palm Sunday and Nouwen is pondering Jesus' entry in Jerusalem and writing of the words spoken by Pere Thomas during the service. Monday is written in the form of a prayer. Tuesday begins with Jesus in John's gospel 'one of you will betray me'. Nouwen writes of Jesus being 'handed over' and moving from activity to passivity. Wednesday Nouwen writes of the positions of Peter and of Judas and the choices one makes to trust in God's mercy and the other to despair in the face of his betrayal rather than trust. Thursday Nouwen describes his participation in the Holy Thursday service at the l'Arche community in Paris and speaks of being touched deeply by the washing of the feet. 'I saw a glimpse of the new kingdom Jesus came to bring. Everybody in the room knew how far they were from being a perfect expression of God's love. But everybody was also willing to make a step in the direction to which Jesus pointed'. Good Friday which Nouwen describes as both a day of suffering and a day of hope. Nouwen writes of seeing Christ's body lying across the whole world and the immense suffering of humanity. Holy Saturday Nouwen writes of the Easter Vigil, and sees 'the celebration of the resurrection of the body is also the celebration of the daily care given to the bodies of these handicapped men and women. Nouwen ends the mediations with Easter Sunday. A quiet Eucharist at Mdme Vanier's house and the discussion after the Mass. 'The five of us sitting in a circle around the table with a little bread and a little wine...knew deep in our hearts that for us too all had changed, while all had remained the same'.

During the last years my own life has gone through so many changes that I have lost much of my self-confidence.' Nouwen then goes on to state that he wants to share his poverty with us by speaking about his current life at l'Arche Daybreak. Nouwen begins by describing his move from the intellectual atmosphere of Harvard to the l'Arche community for the mentally handicapped at Daybreak. It appears this article is taken from a talk Nouwen was asked to give at Harvard University. He speaks of in a sense moving from an atmosphere of issues to 'the background [of a] few very poor people who have taken their place'. Nouwen then writes of the atmosphere of loving equality at his house and then begins to write of Adam Arnett for whom Nouwen had some responsibility. He notes the various ways in which care is used in daily speech but goes on to point out that 'real care excludes indifference and is the opposite of antipathy. Nouwen points to our discomfort at looking at care as anything other than the strong helping the weak. This item consists of edited excerpts from Nouwen's book: Behold the Beauty of the Lord'; commentaries on four Russian icons. The first icon Nouwen looks at is Rublev's Holy Trinity painted in 1425. Nouwen begins by stating 'To live in the world without belonging to the world summarizes the essence of the spiritual life' which reminds us that our true home is with God. Nouwen goes on to write that 'I have never seen the house of love more beautifully expressed than in [this] icon. Nouwen writes that this icon has helped him to enter more deeply into the mystery of God and yet remain fully engaged in the 'hate and fear-filled world'. Nouwen ends this meditation by stating, 'The longer we pray with the icon and the deeper our heart is drawn toward that mysterious place where circle and cross are both present, the more fully we come to understand how to be committed to the struggle for justice and peace in the world while remaining at home in God's love'. In the second icon, The Virgin of Vladimir painted in the 12th C., Nouwen begins by describing the importance of this icon through the centuries. He then begins by writing first of her eyes, then her hands and finally, the child in her arms. Nouwen also writes, 'Contemplating this icon was a profound experience for me. It was the experience of being lifted up through the intercession of the Blessed Mother into the inner life of God'. The third icon, The Savior of Zvenigorod, Nouwen writes first of his longing always, to see the face of Christ and in this 15th C., somewhat damaged icon by Andre Rublev, Nouwen sees a face in which he 'saw what I had never seen before and felt what I had never felt before'. Nouwen speaks of his face and then states, 'what finally makes seeing Rublev's icon such a profound spiritual experience are the eyes of the Savior. The fourth icon is a 15th C. Russian icon entitled 'The Descent of the Holy Spirit'. Nouwen describes how gazing upon this icon helps move his head knowledge to his heart. He suggests that the iconographer 'has chosen to paint the deepest meaning of Pentecost. He wants to express the inner event'. Nouwen concludes by writing, 'All four icons speak of a God not hidden in the dazzling splendor of the divine light, but in reaching out to a world yearning for freedom...'

Nouwen speaks of the house in which he lived with 6 handicapped people and 3 assistants. 'When there are no special crises we live together in a family...We laugh a lot, we cry a lot. Nouwen then goes on to write of his apprehension in being asked to take on some of the care of Adam Arnett who was a severely handicapped man who needed help to do everything, who suffered from grand mal seizures and who could not speak. Nouwen describes his growing sense of friendship with Adam. 'Deep speaks to deep, spirit speaks to spirit, heart speaks to heart. I started to realise that there was a mutuality of love not based on shared knowledge or shared feelings, but on shared humanity'. Nouwen states that Adam's parents when asked what Adam gave to them said, 'He brought us peace...' Nouwen writes then, that Adam's peace is 'first of all a peace rooted in being...Being is more important than doing... His gift is his pure being with us'. Nouwen concludes this article by recalling how much of his own identity and value seemed to be tied up with what he did. 'Adam says to me "Peace is first of all the art of being". I know he is right because after four months of being with Adam I am discovering in myself an inner at-homeness that I did not know before'.

Nouwen begins by talking of the times he prays with Adam Arnett, the severely handicapped man Nouwen helps care for. Then he writes, 'Adam's peace is not only a peace rooted in being but also a peace rooted in the heart'. Nouwen notes that Adam keeps telling him over and over that what makes us human is not our mind but our heart...'by heart I mean the centre of our being where God has hidden the Divine gifts of trust, hope and love'. Nouwen describes Adam's heart as a broken heart from which his peace flows. Nouwen then goes on to say that one of the gifts of Adam's peace is that it helps form community. Because of his needs and gifts Adam is at the center of his community. Nouwen concludes this article by stating, 'Most of my adult life I have tried to show the world that I could do it on my own, that I needed others only to get me back on my lonely road...with many others I wanted to become a self-sufficient star' and yet, Nouwen suggests, that has left a world on the brink of total destruction.

Nouwen describes Adam as a totally dependent man who could not speak nor care for himself and who suffered daily with grand mal seizures. Nouwen describes his own apprehension at being asked to take early morning and evening responsibility for Adam. As he began to know Adam however, Nouwen says, 'Out of this broken body and broken mind emerged a most beautiful human being offering me a greater gift than I would ever be able to offer him'. Nouwen uses the remainder of the article to write of Adam's role as a man of peace, a peacemaker. 'Adam's peace is first of all a peace rooted in being'. Nouwen compares this with the desire of many people to strive for success and for self-worth rather than accepting much more just 'to be'. Nouwen writes of the importance of the heart over the mind; of the heart as the center of our being where God is. Nouwen writes of the ways in which Adam helps to create community among all those who are committed to his care. As Nouwen concludes the article he writes of Jesus, the Prince of Peace ; Jesus whose peace is found in weakness. Nouwen then goes on to speak of the larger international world, 'I am only saying that the seeds of national and international peace are already sown on the soil of our own suffering and the suffering of the poor, and that we truly can trust that these seeds, like the mustard seeds of the gospel, will produce large shrubs in which many birds can find a place to rest.'

This item is an excerpt from an article published in Sojourners Magazine, July, 1985. Nouwen begins by stating, 'People with mental handicaps are able to give much to those who are able to receive. They give their hearts'. Nouwen then goes on to describe the flourishing, fruit-bearing life the handicapped person lives when they live in a loving environment and the suffering and withdrawal when they are rejected. Nouwen concludes, ' They told me in many ways that I didn't need to be afraid of my handicap, that I could also bear fruit as Jesus did when He offered His broken body to God.

This is a photocopy only and the page is not identified. This is identified as an excerpt from Nouwen' 'The Road to Daybreak'. Nouwen begins by stating that he has been meditating on the story of the prodigal son. He describes the sense that the younger son is selfish but all the same is welcomed back. 'God does not require a pure heart before embracing us'. Nouwen then describes Rembrandt's painting of the Prodigal. Nouwen concludes by saying. 'God is standing there with open arms, waiting to embrace me...just having me back is all he desires'.

Henri begins the article by describing his reading as a teacher of Christian spirituality and his discovery that you must be poor 'so God can finally be with you'. Nouwen then goes on to describe his experience at l'Arche Daybreak in Richmond Hill Ontario and in particular his friendship with Adam Arnett. Nouwen describes Adam as a profoundly handicapped man who knows nothing of the world Nouwen has lived in and yet becomes for Nouwen, a teacher. Nouwen writes, "Daybreak turns our expectations upside down...Because of Adam's weakness – his poverty – we can be united in ways that form the body. Because of Adam's needs, we come to grips with our own'. Nouwen goes on to describe a l'Arche community as not a romantic place but one of struggle and a school of discipleship.

This article is about Nouwen's experience with possible death after a road accident. Nouwen begins the article by describing the accident, his experience of the hospital emergency room and intensive care ward. Nouwen describes his gradual awareness that he might die; that he was at peace. 'I kept thinking that dying was quite possible and that I had to prepare myself and my friends for it. And so I let myself enter a place I had never been before: the portal of death.' Nouwen describes his experience of the presence of the love of Jesus and his deep sense of wanting to make the journey of dying to life. Nouwen is hesitant however because he knows there are relationships unhealed and forgiveness not yet given nor received. Nouwen slowly realizes that he will not die and believes that he has work to do. 'I believe that I am asked to proclaim the love God in a new way.' Pondering the way Jesus was in the world Nouwen asks, 'Can I become like Jesus and witness to what I have seen? Yes, I can live in God and speak to the human reality'. Nouwen concludes the article with a quote from Phil. 1:21 -26, words of Paul that Nouwen hopes will be his guide.

This article is adapted from a lecture given by Nouwen for the CHAC's 50th anniversary Day of Celebration, October 25, 1989 in Ottawa, ON. Nouwen begins by reminding his audience of the talk he gave 12 years previously on compassion and indicates that he would now like to speak on the source of compassion: prayer. Nouwen begins by writing about Jesus' prayer which is the source of Jesus' life-giving ministry. 'Every aspect of Jesus' ministry, every word, every action and every detail of his own journey bespeaks life...' Nouwen states that from his prayer of listening Jesus understands he is the beloved and that he wants us to know that we are also. 'Jesus wants each of us to be just as much a child of God as he is himself'. Nouwen then goes on to describe the stresses and pressures that prevent us from being able to hear the God who desires us and our need, over time, to turn to God, to live our lives for God. Nouwen then goes on to speak about freedom which will come from prayer as we learn to listen, to move away from obsessions and compulsions, to say 'no' to death forces. The last half of the article speaks about the discipline of prayer in three ways: discipline of the mind, discipline of the heart, and discipline of the body. Nouwen concludes by stating, '...I call all of you to be men and women of prayer, men and women truly belonging to God, men and women who at every moment of your existence and every part of yourselves will give life, not in your own name, but in the name Him who said, "I come to bring life..." Folder also contains a loose leaf photocopy of the article with annotations.

Nouwen begins by stating that he has recently moved from academia to living at the l'Arche community of Daybreak with men and women who have mental disabilities. He describes being assigned to help a very severely handicapped man named Adam Arnett. Nouwen describes his daily routine with the totally helpless 25 year old man and his growing awareness that Adam was doing more for him than he for Adam. 'This severely handicapped young man, whom outsiders sometimes describe with very hurtful words, started to become my dearest companion'. Nouwen goes on to describe the very special effect Adam has on the people with whom he lives and the peace that, because of Adam's need, helps them to work together.

Nouwen begins by speaking of the dilemma he has felt for much of his lifetime between being successful in the world's sense and remaining 'close to the heart of Jesus.' He then writes of his years teaching at major universities and his sense then of being successful but not fulfilled. In time however, he felt a call to the l'Arche community of Daybreak, near Toronto where he was assigned to work with a very handicapped man named Adam. Nouwen describes how, over time, his fears began to be overcome and he realized that Adam was teaching him about love and about how to create true community. 'To put it simply, Adam taught me about God's love in a concrete way'.

This item, not written by Henri Nouwen, is reporting on the talk he gave at the assembly and it is difficult at points to know what Nouwen said and what is paraphrase. Nouwen made a number of points about the healthcare worker's need to keep close to God. He spoke of being open to the life of the spirit by looking at four gestures that recur in the scriptures: Jesus took bread, blessed it, broke it and gave it. Nouwen is reported as elaborating these points and then moves on to the disciplines required 'to train your life to care for people'. The four disciplines Nouwen elaborated were: the discipline of the mind, the discipline of the heart, the discipline of the spirit and the discipline of the body. The concluding paragraph of this article states, 'In the end, Fr Nouwen said, "What matters is whether your true identity is a child of God". This centering, he says, is what enables you to remain in service of life, not survival.

Nouwen begins by stating that he is writing this in Lourdes during an unexpected divergence from his planned visit to Berlin. 'The question for me was: How to live [the next decade]? The answer came quietly: In deep communion with Jesus'. Nouwen reflects on the water – of Baptism, of healing at the baths, on the rain. Nouwen goes to confession where the priests says to him, 'Don't be afraid to be poor, alone, naked, stripped of all your familiar ways of doing things. God is not finished with you yet'. Nouwen reflects on the innocence of Mary, of Bernadette and of his own. He reflects on Jesus' passion in the Stations of the Cross and on the resurrection. After three days in Lourdes, Nouwen feels it is time to leave and he returns to the L'Arche community at Trosly. Nouwen, reflects as he is in the train returning to Paris, 'I know that every time I choose for my innocence I don't have to worry about the next 10 years. I can be sure I am not alone, but with him who called me to live as God's child'.

In 'A Letter to my Father' Nouwen begins, 'The death of husband, wife, child or friend can cause people to stop living toward the unknown future and make them withdraw into the familiar past'. Nouwen goes on to suggest a better way, which he states that we 'evaluate the past as a continuing challenge to surrender ourselves to an unknown future'. (from a Letter of Consolation). In the second excerpt entitled 'The Necessity for Mourning' Nouwen suggests that in our society we have to make a conscious effort to mourn. 'I know that I must not forget, that I must remember her [Nouwen's mother] even if remembering brings with it pain, sorrow and sadness'. (from In Memoriam). In the third excerpt, entitled, 'Consolation', Nouwen again writing of his mother's death, 'Where do we see the harvest of mother's death?'...and ends by stating, 'the pain mother's death caused us has led us to a new way of being...' (from A Letter of Consolation).

Nouwen begins by stating that 'we have been given many treasures' which sadly are often undiscovered by us. He goes on to identify four treasures in particular: 'he [Jesus] took, he blessed, he broke, he gave'. 1) Taken. 'It means we are chosen, that we are called'. Nouwen describes here how difficult for us to accept that we might be chosen, that we might be beloved. 2) Blessed. 'Jesus is the blessed one and we are blessed as he is'. Here again, Nouwen suggests that it is often very hard for us to accept that we are blessed because we don't hear it from others often enough. 3) Broken. Nouwen begins by stating that Jesus was broken and is urging us to live our brokenness under the blessing of God. 'When we embrace our suffering in this way, it is no longer just an interruption in our life, but connects us with all who are suffering , and, further, with the God who is with the suffering...' 3. Given. Nouwen suggests that as Jesus gave himself in the Last Supper so we are called to give ourselves to the world. He suggests this is to be a total giving not a holding back a portion of ourselves.

This article is identified as being adapted from Nouwen's book, 'Lifesigns'. Nouwen opens with words about the evolution of the celebration of Christmas from experiencing the 'deep, lasting joy of Emmanuel, God-with-us' to 'the shallow happiness of busy people'. Nouwen writes of the deep joy that Jesus offers as a divine gift: 'the joy of Jesus lifts up life to be celebrated fully'. Nouwen identifies joy and celebration as a way in which faith in the God of life is lived. Nouwen suggests that joy is deep and can be present even amidst very hard times. Finally, Nouwen, after speaking about his life in L'Arche, says that 'community is the place where God completes our lives with his joy'.

This item is an excerpt from Chapter 3 of Nouwen's book, 'Clowning in Rome', 1979. Nouwen is writing on the need to pray and opens by suggesting that we tend to think of prayer as one thing to do among many. He then goes on to speak of St Paul's injunction to pray without ceasing. '[Paul] asks us to pray day and night, in joy and in sorrow, at work and at play without intermissions or breaks'. The remainder of the article discusses how we may do this but references further material in the chapter which is not included in this article.

This item is a revised excerpt from Nouwen's book ' Behold the Beauty of the Lord'. This excerpt is a reflection on Andre Rublev's icon 'The Holy Trinity'..Nouwen introduces the article by stating 'The spiritual life keeps us aware that our true house is not the house of fear...but the house of love, where God resides'. He describes this as the essence of the spiritual life and speaks about the icon as reflecting 'the house of love'. From meditation upon this house of love we can move into the world to be present to but not to be part of, this world. Nouwen then speaks about the effect that contemplation of this icon had upon him. Nouwen also speaks of how contemplation of the icon 'reveals the inner beauty of God' and speaks of the link between the cross and love in our world today. Finally, Nouwen concludes by saying, 'I pray that Rublev's icon will teach many how to live in the midst of a fearful, hateful and violent world while moving always deeper into the house of love'.

It is indicated that this is taken from a talk by Nouwen given to 'Celebration 25' honouring the 25th anniversary of the founding of Christian Counselling Services in Toronto. It is part one of five parts. The archives has only the first 3 parts of the series. In the Introduction, Nouwen points to his sense that healing is not strictly the preserve of professionals. 'It belongs to the heart of our Christian vision that all of us, whether we have degrees or not, are called to be healers' through the Holy Spirit. Nouwen goes on to suggest however that the 'first thing the Healing Spirit within us calls us to do is to mourn our losses...'. Nouwen identifies the many kinds of losses people experience and to suggest that 'our survival instinct is to live as if they are not real, as if life goes on as usual nothing really happens'. Nouwen goes on to say, 'true healing starts at the moment that we can face the reality of our losses and let go of the illusions of control...I do believe that the Spirit of Jesus, the Spirit of love, is given to us to reach out beyond our fears and embrace the reality of our losses. That is what mourning is all about'.

Nouwen opens the article with a quote from the Gospel of John 'No one can see the kingdom of God without being born from above' and ' what is born of human nature is human, what is born of the Spirit is Spirit'. Nouwen suggests that these are hard words for humans even though we all want a rebirth; freedom from our frustrations, pains and failures. Nouwen states however, that we also want to control the process. Nouwen goes on to point to two ways to seem to reach the goal: by our own discipline and effort and by the work of the Holy Spirit. The first he suggests, may be adequate but it is not what Jesus intends. 'How can we describe the spiritual rebirth of which Jesus speaks...? An adequate description is impossible... However we can indicate something of what it is and what it is not'. After Nouwen writes of this he then he asks, 'can we do something to be reborn from above...? Nouwen suggests that the greatest part of the answer is the 'way of poverty' in which we discover our own and other's poverty and are able to recognize the work of the Holy Spirit in all. Finally, Nouwen points out that the rebirth from above is never final in this life.

The item is identified as Part Two of a five-part series featuring the text of a talk by Nouwen for the 25th anniversary of Christian Counselling Services in Toronto. The archives has only the first 3 parts. Nouwen begins by stating ' When it is true that we all are healers through the Spirit who lives within us, we are called to create safe spaces to mourn our losses'. Nouwen describes the society we live in as one which does not support weakness, vulnerability, mourning. This, Nouwen suggests, gives rise to secrets, secrets which people hold in and do not share and therefore, do not mourn. 'The Spirit of God within us says: "Mourn, my people, mourn. Let your pain rise up in your heart and burst forth in you with sobs and cries"'. Nouwen goes on to say that insofar as we allow ourselves to feel our pain 'Healing starts not where our pain is taken away, but where it can be shared and seen as part of a larger pain.'

The article is identified as an excerpt from, ed. Robert Durback: 'Seeds of Hope', a Henri Nouwen Reader. Nouwen opens the article by describing his move from academia to the L'Arche community of Daybreak and his introduction to Adam, a severely handicapped man for whom Nouwen is asked to help care. Nouwen describes his initial discomfort but after time realizes that this man 'who by many outsiders is considered an embarrassment, a useless creature who should not have been allowed to be born, had started to become my dearest companion'. In time Nouwen recognizes the presence of Jesus, the Prince of peace in him.

The thoughts found in this article are identified as later to be found in Nouwen's book, "The Life of the Beloved". Nouwen begins the article by stating that in the stress and pressure of modern life he had 'begun to wonder whether there was a single, simple word that might address the deep yearning of contemporary men and women for hope, trust, love and a vision larger than their own changing perspectives...That word is Beloved'. Nouwen goes on to describe how he began to see that word as applying to himself and to all; that it is a word of love from our 'first love', God. Nouwen sees self-rejection as one of the most powerful forces to be overcome in order to see ourselves as beloved. Nouwen suggests that we tend to seek our self-worth from human loves which of their nature will fail us. Nouwen goes on to describe 'the experience of being called the Beloved is the experience of communion', which he believes is the longing of all human hearts. 'The treasure of communion is hidden in the ground on which we stand. That is our holy ground'. Nouwen then writes of the power of forgiveness, 'Forgiveness is the name of love practiced among people who love poorly'...'we need to forgive and be forgiven every day, every hour...' Finally Nouwen writes of the freedom to love that comes with awareness of being the Beloved. 'Once we are free from the expectation of rewards, we no longer select those to whom we offer our love'.

This item is a short excerpt from a lecture by Henri Nouwen at the Scarritt-Bennett Center, 1991. Nouwen begins by quoting from an unknown translation of Ps. 139. Nouwen then states 'The spiritual life starts at the place where you can hear God's voice'. Nouwen concludes this short excerpt by stating that the spiritual life also starts 'where you dare to claim the first love'.

This article is identified as excerpts from Nouwen's forthcoming book The Return of the Prodigal Son. Nouwen begins the article by describing his first encounter with Rembrandt's painting and his powerful response to it coming as it was at a vulnerable time for Nouwen. Nouwen then goes on to write of the biblical story from which the painting and Nouwen's writing is coming. Nouwen relates the story of the younger son and Nouwen's own sense of finding himself in the story. 'Over and over again I have left home. I have fled the hands of blessing and run off to faraway places searching for love! This is the great tragedy of my life and of the lives of so many I meet on my journey'. Nouwen concludes, 'Here the mystery of my life is unveiled. I am loved so much that I am left free to leave home. But the Father is always looking for me with outstretched arms to receive me back...'

The item is from Nouwen's lecture "A Time to Mourn. A Time to Dance" which he gave at Christian Counselling Services' "Celebration 25," on February 4 and 5, 1992 in Toronto. Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'The Spirit of healing that makes us mourn is the same Spirit that makes us dance'. Nouwen suggests that mourning and dancing are never separated. He goes on to say 'To heal is to teach people to dance in the awareness that their many losses, when mourned deeply, are the basis of the choreography of their dance'. Nouwen asks, 'Can you feel the freedom that rises up in you when you have been stripped naked and have nothing to inhibit your movements anymore?' Nouwen concludes the article by telling a story about a friend of his who visited his father who has Alzheimer's.

This item is identified as an excerpt from Nouwen's 'The Return of the Prodigal Son'. Nouwen begins the article by stating, 'I am not used to the image of God throwing a big party'. He then goes on to identify biblical passages where God is said to be throwing banquets and rejoicing and to suggest that 'Celebration belongs to God's kingdom. God not only offers forgiveness, reconciliation and healing, but wants to lift up these gifts as a source of joy for all who witness them'. Nouwen writes of his own inability to see joy in a dark world but notes how Jesus sees joy and cause for celebration in very small, seemingly insignificant moments. 'For God numbers never seem to matter'. 'People who have come to know the joy of God do not deny the darkness but they choose not to live in it'. Nouwen concludes by saying 'When I first saw Rembrandt's Prodigal Son, I never could have dreamt that becoming the repentant son was only a step on the way to becoming the welcoming father. I now see that the hands that forgive, console, heal and offer a festive meal must become my own'.

Parts of this article have been published in The Catholic New Times, Toronto, March/April 1992 and in a revised form in a posthumous book, 'Turn My Mourning into Dancing, 2001. Nouwen begins the article by writing about healing as the skill not only of healing professionals but of all: 'It belongs to the heart of our Christian vision that all of us, whether we have degrees or not, are called to be healers'. Nouwen then goes on to suggest that 'healing is mourning as well as dancing'; that without facing and accepting the dark side of our existence healing cannot occur. 'But true healing calls us to face the harsh realities of our lives and to come to grips with the truth that, while we live in a world subject to the power of the Evil One, we belong to God'. Nouwen's next focus is upon facing and mourning our many losses in life rather than pretending all is fine. Nouwen suggests that we need to let go our illusions of control in order for true healing to occur. We need, as well, to help others to do this if we ourselves are to be healers and we all need a safe place to enter this process. Nouwen then goes on to say 'To heal is to let the Spirit call us to dance'. 'Can you feel the freedom that rises up in you when you have been stripped naked and have nothing to inhibit your movements ...' Nouwen describes two movements of the dance: forgiveness and celebration and concludes the article identifying the presence then of the song of gratitude and of joy.

This article is identified as an excerpt from a forthcoming book by Nouwen entitled, The Life of the Beloved. Nouwen opens with two stories of blessing; one about a young man at a Bar Mitzvah being blessed by his parents and the other about a woman at the L'Arche community of Daybreak asking for a blessing. In each story Nouwen speaks of our need to be blessed, 'To give someone a blessing is the most significant affirmation we can offer'. Nouwen goes on, ' We also need an ongoing blessing that allows us to hear in an ever-new way that we belong to a loving God who will never leave us alone...' Nouwen goes on to offer two suggestions for claiming our blessedness. The first is prayer in which, over time as we learn stillness, we can 'hear' God's word of blessing. The second is 'the cultivation of presence'. In this, Nouwen suggests, we learn to be present to the blessings that come to us each day, no matter how busy or unhappy or worried. Nouwen concludes, ' As you and I walk the streets of the cities in which we live, we can have no illusions about the darkness...Yet all of these people yearn for a blessing. That blessing can be given only by those who have heard it themselves.'	July - August 1992	5 p. of textual records
F4-9-1-1781	Item - The beloved of God: the spiritual search for meaning in living and dying Scope and content: This item is a 2 page article by Henri Nouwen entitled. 'The Beloved of God', published in Sojourners, Vol. 21, No. 8, October 1992, pp. 22-23. This item is identified as an excerpt from Nouwen's forthcoming book, Life of the Beloved. Nouwen begins by writing, 'As the one who is chosen, blessed, broken and given, you are called to live your life with a deep inner joy and peace'. Nouwen goes on to say that our lives are changed radically when we recognize ourselves as being sent into the world. 'Put simply, life is a God-given opportunity to become who we are, to affirm our own true spiritual nature, claim our truth, appropriate and integrate the reality of our being, but most of all , to say yes to the One who calls us the Beloved'. Nouwen goes on to write then, of the meaning of our life and death; the reality of the 'hereafter' and suggests that 'Eternal life is not some great surprise that comes at one at the end of our existence in time; it is rather, the full revelation of what we have been and have lived all along'.	October 1992	2 p. of textual records

This item is identified as an excerpt from Nouwen's 'The Return of the Prodigal Son'. Nouwen begins by stating 'I am not used to the image of God throwing a big party'. Nouwen goes on to write of the various instances in scripture in which Jesus speaks about banquets of celebration. 'Celebration belongs to God's kingdom. God not only offers forgiveness, reconciliation and healing, but wants to lift up these gifts as a source of joy for all who witness them'. Nouwen goes on to write of Rembrandt's painting of the Prodigal and his reflections on it, finding himself in the returning son, the older son and finally, the father. 'God rejoices. Not because the problems of the world have been solved, not because all human pain and suffering have come to an end...no, God rejoices because one of his children who was lost has been found'. Nouwen describes his difficulty in being able to rejoice in small things, scarcely noticed things. 'The father of the prodigal son gives himself totally to the joy that his returning son brings him. I have to learn from that. I have to learn to "steal" all the real joy there is to steal and lift it up for others to see'. Nouwen goes on to examine the 'radical difference' between cynicism and joy. 'Every moment of each day I have the chance to choose between cynicism and joy'. Nouwen ends by remembering that the younger son must grow in maturity and that he, Nouwen, and we are called not just to recognize ourselves in the two sons, but to become the father.

It is identified as first published in Spiritual Life, Vol. 38, No. 1, Spring 1992 by the Discalced Carmelite Friars of Washington, D.C., pp. 29 – 32. Nouwen opens the article with a quote from the Gospel of John 'No one can see the kingdom of God without being born from above' and ' what is born of human nature is human, what is born of the Spirit is Spirit'. Nouwen suggests that these are hard words for humans even though we all want a rebirth; freedom from our frustrations, pains and failures. Nouwen states however, that we also want to control the process. Nouwen goes on to point to two ways to seem to reach the goal: by our own discipline and effort and by the work of the Holy Spirit. The first he suggests, may be adequate but it is not what Jesus intends. 'How can we describe the spiritual rebirth of which Jesus speaks...? An adequate description is impossible... However we can indicate something of what it is and what it is not'. After Nouwen writes of this he then he asks, 'can we do something to be reborn from above...? Nouwen suggests that the greatest part of the answer is the 'way of poverty' in which we discover our own and other's poverty and are able to recognize the work of the Holy Spirit in all. Finally, Nouwen points out that the rebirth from above is never final in this life.

John Mogabgab, Upper Room Books, Nashville, TN, 2011. Scope and content: This item is a 4-page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'All is Grace', published in 'Weavings', by The Upper Room, Vol. VII, No. 6, November/December, 1992, pp. 38 – 41. Nouwen begins the article by describing a time at the l'Arche Daybreak community when a couple who were assistants were leaving to start a new community. Nouwen noticed that people spoke of gratitude for their time in terms of the good things that were achieved but spoke of the difficult or painful things as things to be forgotten. Nouwen then describes his own realization that in fact, 'Gratitude as the gospel speaks about it embraces all of life'. Nouwen goes on to point out, 'Jesus calls us to recognize that gladness and sadness are never separate, that joy and sorrow really belong together, and that mourning and dancing are part of the same movement'. Nouwen then points to what he calls 'the discipline of gratitude' and concludes speaking about the 'celebration of gratitude'.
F4-9-1-1785	Item - L'Arche in North America: home, healing and hope 1993 0.1 cm of textual records Scope and content: This item is a 5-page article by Henri Nouwen entitled 'L'Arche in North America: Home, Healing and Hope', published in 'Letters of L'Arche', No. 76, 1992, pp. 2 – 6. Nouwen is writing this at the time of the funeral of Pere Thomas Philippe, one of the founders of L'Arche. Nouwen senses that Pere Thomas' legacy of the vision of L'Arche will continue to live, 'he can bring a rich harvest'. Nouwen goes on to ask 'how to be l'Arche in North America'? Nouwen sees three core words that will bear much fruit: Home, Healing and Hope. I. Home: Nouwen sees L'Arche as being home especially for the core members many of whom have experienced living in institutional places that were not 'home'. Nouwen goes on to describe the sense of homelessness that many in North America experience: actual homelessness, but also places where people live without a welcome, places where people live in loneliness, places where people live alone together. Nouwen notes that the Assistants who come to L'Arche have and do experience this homelessness as well. Nouwen sees that home at L'Arche provides a place to be home but also to be a place of mission and a recognition that we are still journeying home. II. Healing: 'The great paradox of L'Arche is that, while no one is cured, everyone is healed'. Nouwen speaks of the great suffering that has been experienced by the core members but also by the Assistants. All seek healing. 'It is clear that we are all handicapped that we all need to offer each other healing by the way we live together'. III. Hope: 'L'Arche invites people, barely respected or acknowledged by our society, to become witnesses of hope'. 'Joy, peace, acceptance, truthfulness, the ability to welcome, to forgive and to celebrate; these are only some of the gifts handicapped people have to offer...This knowledge of the 'gift of the poor' has been a great inspiration in L'Arche over the years, and has made L'Arche into a true sign of hope'.

Y., 1992. Scope and content: This item is a 5- page article by Henri Nouwen entitled, 'Broken' published in 'Living Prayer' by Living Prayer Inc., Barre, VT, Vol. 26, No. 2, March – April 1993, pp. 3 – 7. This item is a slightly abbreviated chapter from Nouwen's book 'Life of the Beloved'. Nouwen is writing this as a letter to a secular friend. Nouwen begins by saying 'Our sufferings and pains are not simply bothersome interruptions of our lives; rather they touch us in our uniqueness...the way I am broken tells you something unique about me'. Nouwen goes on to suggest that the most painful brokenness in society is what he calls 'inner brokenness – a brokenness of the heart'. He suggests that the reaction of many is to feel rejected, alone and cast out by God. Nouwen offers two ways we may respond to our brokenness: befriending it and second, putting it under the blessing. Nouwen suggests that though looking the brokenness in the eye and befriending it is counter-cultural because we want to move away from pain, it is the way to healing. Nouwen then goes on to write about putting brokenness under the blessing as in fact, a precondition for befriending it. 'Then our brokenness will gradually come to be seen as an opening toward the full acceptance of ourselves as the Beloved'. Nouwen concludes with some comments about how the music of Leonard Bernstein has helped him to understand what he is now writing about.

This is part 3 of a three part series of which the archives has only this. It is however, a slightly revised version of an article originally published in Sojourners, July 1981 and it seems likely that parts 1 and 2 will be as published in Sojourners (box 295, # 1637). Nouwen refers in the opening to this being the most seductive temptation of the 3 Jesus was faced with in the desert. Nouwen goes on to say that 'there is probably no culture in which people are so unabashedly encouraged to seek power as ours'. Nouwen points out how we cannot believe that any good comes from powerlessness but that the call of Jesus was to just that. But that 'only undivided attention to God can make a powerless ministry possible'. Nouwen concludes by stating, 'Only when all of our service finds its source and goal in God can we be free from the desire for power and proceed to serve our neighbours for their sake and not our own'.

Subseries F4-9-4: Book reviews

Date: 1972 - 1996, predominant 1981 - 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of published articles as well as bookstore advertising, and transcripts of radio reviews regarding Nouwen's books, audio cassettes, and booklets. Also included are book reviews mentioning Nouwen's forewords and a book of which Nouwen was a contributing author. The articles are in various formats including entire publications, clippings, and photocopies as originally saved by Nouwen. This sub-series contains only those articles which Nouwen or his office collected.

In an attempt to re-establish a system similar to that originated by Nouwen, the Archives created one file to represent each reviewed book, etc., combining the various translations for a single book in the single file. On occasion, articles were photocopied by the Archives staff should more than one of Nouwen's books be mentioned; the copies were distributed to the appropriate book review files.

Physical description: 23.0 cm of textual records

Language of the material:

- English
- Dutch
- German

Subseries F4-9-7: Books by Nouwen

Date: 1969 - 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of hard and soft cover books or booklets written by Nouwen or containing Nouwen's words, published between 1969 and 1996. The Archives has a variety of editions, printings and translations of his books. It is not certain how Nouwen obtained most of the English versions since, other than a handful of presentation copies, few were personally inscribed to him. Although it may be presumed that some were publisher gifts, since many of the books still have their price tags, it is possible that they were purchased by Nouwen or his associates.

Central Circle: Communion with God. Second Circle: Communion with Community (disciples). Third Circle: Ministry through words and healing. Communion is the source of Love. Communion as Connectedness. Communion as Spirit, as a breathing between Father and Son. This relationship between Jesus Christ is both totally unique and totally mutual, and it is called Spirit. Henri says he is convinced more than ever that all human beings are called to Communion with God. The degree to which a person tastes this relationship will determine their degree of integration into society, how much they can contribute to society. By not acknowledging Communion, an individual will become manipulative and violent in their relations with others. Lacking Communion, people will turn to popularity, success and power in attempts to grasp at Belonging. It is important that Communion takes place at 'Night' in this passage of Luke because night is when we (and Jesus) are tempted to seek Communion outside our relationship with God. II. Out of Communion will grow Community.	January 28 - 30, 1991	4 videocassettes (4 hrs.)

Annotation on card : "Dear Henry [sic], Deepest Gratitude for sharing yourself and your ideas on aging. Kathy". Scope and content: File consists of a video recording of an interview with Nouwen at L'Arche Daybreak for the University of Notre Dame Alumni Continuing Education on April 3, 1996. Nouwen spoke on caring for aging parents and the spiritual challenges of aging. The video is of high quality, although it is not possible to hear the questions of the interviewer. Nouwen covers many themes including belovedness, death, dying, caring, caregivers, aging, care, cure, and spiritual disciplines. Nouwen identifies aging as a letting go of our identity as what we do, what we earn etc. and learning our true identity as the Beloved sons and daughters of God. He suggests that aging brings us closer to our true identity. Aging is about becoming more dependent but it offers us the space to find the truth of who we are. This is the great spiritual challenge of aging. He addresses some of the following questions: How do we overcome our fear of aging? Answer: We require a discipline that reminds us constantly of being the Beloved. These disciplines are: friendship, prayer, community, and celebration of life. Again the spiritual challenge is how do I let go and discover the deeper truth of who I am. How to be a good caregiver? Answer: Nouwen refers to the gospel which says "Blessed are the poor" and exclaims that we are all poor. The caregiver must believe and perceive that God's blessing is rooted in the poverty of the poor. To be a good caregiver we must start discovering the gift our aging parent has to offer us. One of these gifts is to be called back to the centre of your being. All the work of caring for the aging can make us resentful, but we have to make an inner shift that allows the parent to give us the gift of going deeper within ourselves to find out what life is all about. Burnout happens when a caregiver does not receive the gifts of the poor. It requires a discipline to receive and we can only do this if we are well cared for. Need to constantly renew perspective on what we are doing and live joyfully receiving the gifts of the dying. This is an enormous spiritual challenge - to discover the gifts of aging and dying people. To be really present to the person dying (ministry of presence); know the value of the ministry of absence and when to set some limits to look after your own needs; take time out to be with people who can support you. The most difficult thing is to be half way there and resentful. Be fully present for shorter periods of time. Care means to struggle with. It is the same word as compassion. To care is to be with people in their weakness, pain and struggle without needing to cure. All you need to say is "I love you and really want to be with you, even if I can't cure you." Joy comes from being with. It is hard to be with people we can't change, but you can develop a spiritual discipline to care rather than cure. Nouwen also emphasized the importance of the caregiver coming to terms with their own mortality. He reminds the interviewer that aging and dying don't start at the end of life, but that we are all in the process of aging and dying. Compassion means "I am with you because I know in my own self that I too am dying, that I am on the same journey as you." The caregiver needs to feel solidarity and intimacy with the person dying in order for care to be possible. Not only does the caregiver need to be in touch with their own dying, they need to learn the discipline to deal with little disappointments as well. Nouwen talks about the reasons for his decision to leave Yale and Harvard. He says: "I realized that to get to the core of my being, to move to a different plateau I needed to be more focused on the poor and the weak. I knew that by connecting myself with the poor they would lead me to myself and to God." Regarding his accident in 1989: Through this near-death experience Nouwen learned the importance of forgiveness and what is important in life. He explains that although he is still compulsive in some regards, underneath is a sense of being God's beloved son and that the

Nouwen gave four talks. SR110v1 "Pastor as Spiritual Leader"; <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• SR110v1._a – 55:12</li> </ul> Nouwen thanks Ann Johnson for inviting him, and introduces the talk, "Think about this as a time to be together in prayer, listening, sharing, as a kind of mini retreat, in which you might make some connections. I will say things that you might connect with. If not, let it go. If it connects, let it grow. But, trust more where you connect and where you agree, because spiritual life is a life of making connections. You come out of a world in which we are often agreeing or disagreeing, but maybe for a few hours we can just rest in the spirit, and feel sort of safe, and feel together, and feel ready to let God speak to us." He says that he no longer likes to travel alone, and says, "The place from where I speak and where I learn about the spiritual life, is from my own community." He introduces Lorenzo Sforza, David Gray, and Francis Maurice as his companions from his L'Arche Community, and he hopes that the people present at the convent will involve these members in their life at the convention. Nouwen talks about several things in the talk: his community, how his understanding of the spiritual life and ministry has flown out of that community, telling stories about people so the listeners can connect them to their own story, and the disciplines of the spiritual life. He says the morning will be interrupted with some songs and some moments of silence. Community, and his discovery of his ministry: talks about Jean Vanier and the origins of L'Arche as a 'safe home.' He discusses how this community has helped him to discover who God is in a whole new way, and says: "I must say, it moves me very deeply, especially in this Christmas season, that the ones who become or who are totally dependent who cannot stay alive without constant care, are the one who reveal God to us. They bring me back in touch with that incredible mystery that God decided to overcome our fear by becoming completely dependent on us. The child Jesus is a child, a baby, if we believe, that that is the God among us, we have to realize that we have to care for God, to keep God alive among us." Spiritual Life: "To live a life of ministry means to lay down your life for your friends." He talks about being held in a place of love, where we are loved for all eternity – before we are born we are loved, we are loved during our short chronology, and we are loved after we die. The spiritual life is knowing that you have been loved and will be loved. He speaks about living the life of the beloved. You are not what you do, what people say about you, or what you have. The world uses these ideas to manipulate us and make us happy or depressed according to its strategies. Believing that you are what you do, what people say about you, or what you have, is tragic, because when you're dead, you're dead. You no longer do anything, people don't talk about you, and you don't have anything. Our true identity is that we are beloved sons and daughters of God. That is what ministry is – living with the knowledge that you are the beloved, and God's favorite blessing. SR110v1_b – 55:07 We are victimized by the world, because the world wants to suggest that we are not the beloved. It is hard to get in touch with that voice that says 'you are the beloved.' Nouwen says, "I tell you, if your ministry comes out of that truth, a whole new world opens up. You are acting out of the place, Don't worry what to say to your judges. Don't prepare speeches. The peace out of your anxiety of what people think about you. Trust that the spirit will speak through you, but you have to live in the spirit. You belong to me, as I belong to you. You are mine, I am yours. I will never never leave you alone. And the love with which I love you for all eternity, is

This man welcomes Nouwen, Sr. Sue Mosteller, and Bill van Buren. He then introduces Fr. Bennet Simms, a Bishop of the church, friend of Kanuga, and member of the Bowen committee. Simms introduces Nouwen, and mentions that Nouwen receives forty invitations to speak each week, so that alone tells them how fortunate they are to have Henri and his friends among them. Nouwen begins with a word about himself, and says he wanted to be a priest since he was four years old. He says it is a privilege to not be there alone, and he started to realize more and more that Jesus was saying to go two by two or three by three. Nouwen hopes the conference thinks of them as a little community sent out by their community to minister to them. He doesn't think of himself as giving ministry, but as coming to share their lives. Sr. Mosteller briefly speaks about the L'Arche Daybreak community, a brief history, its goals, what it's like to live there. Van Buren speaks about his life at Daybreak, and that he lives in an apartment now. He got quite nervous and couldn't speak, so Nouwen asked him questions to help him along. Nouwen begins by speaking about the voice of God, and how it speaks to him and to us. Jesus came to show us how to live, and our journey comes from listening to that voice of Jesus. It's a very soft voice, a very non-intrusive voice. God was in that gentle voice. That's the word we have to hear, you are my beloved son, you are my beloved daughter. We have to help each other hear that voice so we can live in this world that requires from us to make a contribution. He asks people to listen to the voice and look for where the word speaks to them, and to descend from the mind into the heart. He asks them to use inner silence where they can listen for the voice, and to be silent while at the retreat, and not in discussion. SR119 v2: "Henri Nouwen Address I - Wednesday Afternoon"; <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• SR119v.2_a – 47:14</li> </ul> Starts with music – Announcer: Kanuga Conferences, an Episcopal Conference Center near Hendersonville, NC, presents, "The Beloved Community" with Henri Nouwen. Nouwen begins by writing Latin words on a white board: O adoramus te domine. He says this afternoon, he would like to speak about adherence, and being connected in an intimate way with God, and to adhere in prayer. Song: O adoramus te domine. Nouwen gives instructions during the song on how to sing (louder, softer, etc.). Speaks about the text that they reflected on in the morning. He says, "Our spiritual life will really depend on our willingness to hear the voice that calls us to be the beloved." Nouwen talks about living the spiritual life. He begins by talking about life, and draws a line on the white board, and talks about our short chronologies. Merton spoke about our clock time – the clock keeps ticking, and it goes by quite fast. It is important for us to look at our lives, and look at our time. We walk with a question: who am I? That is a very central question. We want to be useful people, and do things that give us a sense of doing something significant in life. If we cannot do anything anymore, we feel threatened somewhere in the basis of our being. To be useless is a threat. There are quite a lot of people who cannot do anything. People with disabilities suffer not because they cannot talk or walk, but because they feel they are useless, they are not doing something that makes other people proud of them, and the false burden, if

Two speakers lead before Henri begins his part of the talk: Mother Madeleine Mary, Superior at the monastic Community of The Holy Spirit in New York, speaks first. Carl MacMillan, a member of L'Arche Daybreak, speaks second, and introduces the overall purpose of L'Arche, and introduces Henri. Henri leads the audience in singing a hymn. Topics discussed by Nouwen include caring and ministry, the importance of community, and solitude. After the formal talk, Nouwen takes questions from the audience. A member of the audience asks how sexuality fits into these topics: Nouwen discusses how sexuality reflects our need for belonging, intimacy, and communion.

The interview took place on August 28, 1992 in Northampton, and was broadcast on BBC Radio 4 on July 11, 1993. Mike Ford introduces Nouwen, and explains how his own interest in Nouwen grew through reading Nouwen's book, "Reaching Out." Nouwen discusses with Ford in the interview how seeing a poster of the Rembrandt painting "Return of the Prodigal Son" at a L'Arche community in Northern France evoked a feeling of homecoming in Nouwen. He recounts his trip to Leningrad to see the original painting, and his growing awareness that he can see himself as all three major figures in the painting: the younger son (through the feeling of coming home), the elder son (who still holds onto anger), and the father (Nouwen's role as a father receiving others home). Nouwen also discusses the challenges that arise when living in a community.

It is good to be with you again." It is a letter, and he is speaking just to the recorder. He says he is enjoying his time in Freiburg, and is getting rested and is excited to begin writing again. He arrived very exhausted, but is feeling better now, and is grateful to be in Freiburg. He continues talking about the creed and Jesus. He discusses the second statement of the creed, which is, "I believe in Jesus Christ." Jesus is the redeemer, the savior. We have to have a personal understanding of our need to be saved. If you don't feel the need to be saved from anything, then you can hardly be excited about a savior. He talked before about God as a creator, and in the Genesis story, God wanted to be sure that the human person would remain obedient to him, and would remain centered on Him who has created man. The question of what is good and what is evil is God's question, and we cannot decide that. We consider the story about the fall and sin of Adam and Eve, and it is a story in which the human person forgets that he or she is not God. He or she can only be truly happy, really, truly, fully human, when he or she continues to give honour to the God who has created him or her. If we look at the journey of the Jewish people as is written in the Old Testament, we see that one of the main temptations is the temptation of idolatry. We are always tempted to forget that God is God and not we. We give power to created beings or created ideas or created events, and before we know it, we expect of other beings something that only God can give. We expect from events, ideas, books, art, music, something that only God can give. This temptation is constant, and it always gets us into trouble because we have a heart that will only truly be satisfied with perfect fulfillment, and only God can give that. This idolatry traps us, makes us victims, and it makes us addicted. We are trapped there, like we are trapped in drugs or alcohol, we can be trapped by desires for fame or success, or money, and so on. We need someone to un-trap us. Jesus is the savior, the one who comes to get us out of our trap, to redeem us from our imprisonment, to set us free. Only God will satisfy the deepest desires of the heart. Only God loves us in a way that corresponds to the desires of our heart. Nouwen concludes by saying he is missing everyone, and is grateful to Nathan [Ball] that he visited. He says it is wonderful that in this way [the tapes] they can support each other and keep each other's faith and support each other's hopes. SR133v3 "The Resurrection of Jesus #4, Henri Nouwen, Feb. 1993"; <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>SR133v.3_a – 46:46 (ends at 22:51)</li> </ul> Nouwen begins with "Dear friends," like a letter. He says he has just returned from France, where he attended the funeral of Pere Thomas, the co-founder of L'Arche, and a very holy man with great spiritual vision, that gave Nouwen and many others a great amount of spiritual support. Pere Thomas was the man who gave the vision to Jean Vanier of L'Arche and to many others who came to him. Nouwen reflects in this talk on resurrection, and how the death of Pere Thomas deepened his hope for the resurrection and his faith in the resurrection. The resurrection is the central point of his faith. In the creed it says, "Jesus descended to the dead. On the third day, he rose again." Jesus was born among us, lived among us, suffered among us, and died among us. In this God was with us in every respect. The resurrection of Jesus was the event from which we have come to understand everything else. Without the resurrection, everything else that we say about Jesus loses its meaning.

Subseries F4-12-3: Collected articles

Date: [197-?] - 1995 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of more than 70 articles collected by Nouwen for his research, writing, speeches, as reference for his duties as pastor, and for general interest. The sub-series consists of newspaper, magazine and journal articles as well as copied chapters from books and three manuscripts.

It is not known the exact purpose or reason these articles were kept, therefore, the archivist has arranged the sub-series in alphabetical order by title of the article. The articles in this series were likely collected and kept by Nouwen. There are other articles in 1.8.13. Henri Nouwen fonds - Administrative resources files. There are three files with a collection of articles (14081, 14082, 14083). These articles were likely given to Nouwen and so were filed with resources when they came in with letters.

Subseries F4-12-5: Postcards and icons

Date: 1964 - 1996 (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of approximately 500 postcards and icons collected by Nouwen. The postcards are blank except for three which contain letters on the verso. Nouwen maintained the collection of postcards and icons in three plastic index card boxes. The first section contains postcards largely of a religious nature, including architecture churches, monasteries, etc. from around the world) and artwork by Van Gogh, Chagall, Rodin, Degas, Renoir, Barlach, and others, as well as postcards of New York. Also contains a photograph of a sculpture of Jesus on the cross and the three postcards with letters.

The second section contains postcards of a religious nature, including architecture (churches, monasteries, etc. from around the world) and artwork by Renoir, Van Gogh, Rodin, and others. Also contains postcards of people, flowers and nature scenes, and scenes of places from predominantly around the US.

The third section contains envelopes of icons and postcards. The envelopes are labelled "Icons", "Marthe Robin", "Archives", "Abbey of the Genesee", "Marthe Robin", "Genesee", "Rembrandt", "Check For Archives" and "Freiburg Cards". Also contains some loose cards in the back, as well as a photograph of a picture of Edith Stein in 1925 and a photograph of a church, inscribed in Dutch on the back. This box also contains icon ordination cards from the 25th anniversary of Nouwen's ordination.

Subseries F4-12-6: Materials regarding Seward Hiltner

Date: [1936 - 1971] (creation)

Scope and content: Sub-series consists of articles and materials collected by Nouwen on Seward Hiltner. Materials were likely collected while Nouwen was at Notre Dame University and at Yale Divinity School. The material was likely collected for use in courses that Nouwen was teaching from 1967 to 1975 at Notre Dame, the Joint Pastoral Institute in Amsterdam, Catholic Theological Institute of Utrecht, and Yale. The courses were on the topic of Pastoral Care. The material might also have informed Nouwen's Theology degree, but this needs more research. In a letter in the file titled "Nouwen correspondence regarding Hiltner material" Nouwen writes, "I am presently involved in research concerning Seward Hiltner, and am trying to collect as many of his writings as possible."

Seward Hiltner (1909 - 1984) was an American Presbyterian minister who lived his life and work focused on the interface between psychology and theology. He believed that the two disciplines are vital to each other and that together they were a decisive force in shaping pastoral care and counseling. In addition to many other positions, Hiltner was the theological consultant for the Menninger Clinic as well as executive secretary for the Council of Clinical Training of Theological Students (founded by Boisen in 1930).

Series F4-13: Administrative resources files

Date: 1982 - 1997 (creation)

Scope and content: Series consists of administrative resources files which were maintained for Nouwen by Nouwen's administrative staffs from 1983 to 1997. These files contain materials collected by Nouwen in order to assist him with his roles as pastor, writer, researcher, and friend. In addition to subject-based material such as newspaper clippings and brochures, it is evident that Nouwen's administrative assistants at Daybreak used these files to hold administrative material related to liturgical events such as Christmas, Lent, and Easter, as well as other aspects of Nouwen's duties in the community. These files were likely maintained as a resource for Nouwen regarding his daily work.

The titles of the files are taken directly from the file labels created by Nouwen and his administrative assistants, unless otherwise noted. The files are arranged by subject or topic (such as Latin America, Vincent van Gogh, or Abbey of the Genesee), are in alphabetical order, and materials within the files have been maintained chronologically. Many of the materials have been placed in this series because they contain annotations, either by Nouwen or an assistant, saying "File" with the subject or name or "File - Resource files."

F4-14-7-395	File - Glass chalices and paten  Note [General] : Title based on contents of the file. Note [General] : See Can You Drink the Cup, page 17, for a brief description, by Nouwen, of these items. Scope and content: File consists of two clear glass chalices, and one clear glass paten. One of the chalices is slightly larger than the other. These chalices were used by Nouwen while he was a priest at L'Arche Daybreak. The cups were made by a glassblower in Vermont, Simon Pearce. Nouwen liked the clear glass because the wine could be seen, and many people could drink from them. He wrote, in Can You Drink the Cup, "These glass cups speak about a new way of being a priest and a new way of being human."	before 1996	2 glass chalices and glass paten

F4-14-7-395-E144	Item - Glass chalice before 1996 1 glass chalice : 23 cm x 12 cm Note [General] : Title based on contents of the item. Note [General] : Item is stored in a gray felt bag. Scope and content: Item consists of one clear glass chalice. F4-14-7-395-E145	Item - Glass chalice before 1996 1 glass chalice : 26 cm x 12 cm Note [General] : Title based on contents of the item. Note [General] : Item is stored in a gray felt bag. Scope and content: Item consists of one clear glass chalice. Chalice is approximately 12 cm in diameter, and 26 cm tall. It is slightly larger than E144. Chalice is very simple, but the node on this chalice is slightly decorative with a crimped pattern. Nouwen used this chalice for the Eucharist while he was a priest at L'Arche Daybreak.
F4-14-7-395-E146	Item - Glass paten before 1996 1 glass paten : 22 cm x 9.5 cm Note [General] : Title based on contents of the item. Note [General] : Item is stored in a gray felt bag. Scope and content: Item consists of one clear glass paten. The plate of the paten is 22 cm in diameter, and the paten is approximately 9.5 cm tall, while the base is 9 cm in diameter. It is very simple in design. Nouwen used this paten to give the Eucharist while a priest at L'Arche Daybreak.
F4-14-7-E140	Item - Wooden crucifix before 1996 1 crucifix : wood ; 90.0 cm x 64.0 cm Note [General] : Title based on contents of the item. Scope and content: Item consists of one large wooden crucifix. The figure of Jesus is intricately carved. According to an email from Sue Mosteller and Joe Child, in which Joe tells what he remembers of the figure: "The story I remember is that there was an old priest at Freiburg University who was an old friend of Henry's. Either before or after he died, he gave Henry the cross, and it came from a church in WWII, and the cross was all he recovered from the bombed out building. Henry brought it back and showed it to me and asked if I would mount it on a cross. I made a cross, and then gave it a high gloss finish. This accentuated the figure, which was a carved figure of Christ, and there was no finish on it, so it contrasted well with the finish on the cross. Henry liked it, and was around the old chapel for a long time. That is about all I can remember."

F4-14-7-E141	Item - Gold chalice Note [General] : Title based on contents of the item. Note [General] : Engraving text is in Dutch and Latin. Scope and content: Item consists of one gold chalice and its matching paten, as well as a small spoon (used to give the Eucharist to those who could not receive it otherwise). The chalice base features a small crucifix, as well as other decorative engravings of grapes and grape leaves, and a few diamonds that belonged to Nouwen's maternal grandmother. The bottom of the chalice is engraved with a Latin phrase, "Ego sum vites, vox palmites" ["I am the vine, you are the branches"], as well as the name of Reverend Antonius Cornelis Ramselaar, Nouwen's uncle. The chalice was Ramselaar's, and it was given to Nouwen on the occasion of his ordination in 1957. The chalice and paten have a leather carrying case, and they are wrapped in blue velvet.	1922	1 gold chalice.- 1 paten.- 1 spoon
F4-14-7-E142	Item - Wooden tabernacle Note [General] : Title based on contents of the item. Scope and content: Item consists of one wooden tabernacle. The item has two doors in the front, which lock [key included]. The tabernacle would have been used to store the Eucharist.	n.d.	1 wooden tabernacle: 30.5 cm x 27.0 cm x 30.5 cm
F4-14-7-E143	Item - Pink drawstring bag Note [General] : Title based on contents of the item. Scope and content: Item consists of one pink cloth drawstring bag with colourful embroidery and a yellow drawstring. This is a religious artifact, as the bag has a large decorative cross embroidered on it. There is also a woven cross, from red string, located inside, as well as two small linen cloths (called purificators) with a cross on them.	before 1996	1 cloth bag

Series F4-15: Photographs

Date: [1947] - [1996] (creation)

Scope and content: Series consists of colour and black and white photographs (including negatives) accumulated by Nouwen, and colour slides taken by him and others. Photographs not taken by Nouwen were gathered mainly from friends and acquaintances through correspondence, over a period of approximately 30 years. The photographs were stored by Nouwen and his administrative assistant(s) in files, or displayed on one of several large bulletin boards Nouwen used in his office and photograph albums compiled. Some photographs that arrived with correspondence were kept in the General Files series with their letter of origin, while others which were not clearly attached to a letter were separated and added to this series.

Subject matter depicted in the photographs include professional portraits of Nouwen; Nouwen in both his professional and private capacities at: the Yale and Harvard Divinity Schools, and at L'Arche Daybreak (leading church services, at birthdays and Christmas celebrations), religious events (baptisms, first communions, ordinations and weddings); as well as his travels to Peru and Bolivia, the United States, France, and other countries; and with his family in the Netherlands both as a child and as an adult. Photographs also depict Nouwen's friends, their families, and L'Arche Daybreak assistants and core members. In addition, a large number of photographs in this series (approximately one fifth), document Nouwen's time spent in Germany with a flying trapeze troupe, The Flying Rodleighs.

Slides were taken by Nouwen of Martin Luther King, Jr's civil rights march from Selma to Montgomery, AL, in March 1965; of the University of Notre Dame; vacations, including a trip to Greece; and of Nouwen with Rodleigh Stevens of The Flying Rodleighs in 1995.

This series is arranged in three sub-series:

1.15.1. Photographs Accumulated by Henri Nouwen

1.15.2. Early Personal Photographs

1.15.3. Photograph Albums

The series include both file- and item-level descriptions. Photographs and slides are arranged in chronological order where possible.

Physical description: 5.5 m of graphic material (ca. 3380 photographs)

Note [General] : Title based on contents of the series. See file and item level descriptions for more details. Other photographs can be found in accession files (2002 16, 2002 17, 2002 81, Frank Hamilton), Published Works, Research and Study Notes, Teaching Materials and General Files series. Other photographs and albums can be found in the Nouwen Family fonds.
