Biographical note

Martin Friedland was born in Toronto in 1932. He was educated at the University of Toronto, in commerce and finance (BCom 1955) and law (LLB 1958), where he was the gold medalist in his graduating year. He continued his academic training at Cambridge University, from which he received his PhD in 1967.

Dr. Friedland's career has embraced several areas where he has utilized his knowledge of commerce and finance as well as of law. He has been a university professor and administrator, a shaper of public policy in Canada through his involvement with provincial and federal commissions, committees and task forces, and is an author of international standing.

Dr. Friedland was called to the Ontario Bar in 1960. His contribution to the formation of public policy in Canada began with his earliest research, a study of gambling in Ontario (1961). Over the next few years his work as a legal associate, consultant, and committee member helped shape the Ontario Securities Act (1965), the Ontario Legal Aid Act (1966), the Ontario Regional Detention Centres Act (1967) and the Ontario Provincial Courts Act (1968). As a member of the Federal Task Force on the Canadian Corporations Act (1967-1968), Dr. Friedland contributed to the Canadian Business Corporations Act which was finally passed in 1974.

In 1971 Dr. Friedland was appointed a full-time commissioner of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, serving only one year before returning to Toronto as Dean of the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. His study on access to the law was published in 1975 and he continued to do work for the Commission into the 1980s, especially on national security and criminal codification. In the 1990s he contributed to the discussion on the formation of a new Law Commission.

In 1975 Dr. Friedland served as a consultant to the Solicitor General of Canada's Task Force on Gun Control and authored a background study on the subject. He has retained his interest and involvement in the issue as it has unfolded in the 1990s. Appointed in 1977 to hear cases under the Ontario Human Rights Act, he sat on a number of boards of inquiry until 1995, when his contract was not renewed. From 1978 to 1980 he was a consultant to the McDonald Commission during its enquiry into the activities of the RCMP and national security, for which he prepared another background study. The result was the Canadian Security and Intelligence Act of 1984.

In the 1980s he served as a consultant to the Canadian Sentencing Commission and to the Law Reform Commission of Canada. The principal issues he addressed were the sentencing structure, a review of the Criminal Code, and offences against public order.

In 1987-1988 he chaired the Ontario Task Force on the controversial issues of inflation protection for employment pension plans. Though legislation was introduced, the report was not, in the end, implemented. In 1989 he took part in the Royal Society of Canada's study on tobacco, nicotine and addiction and began serving part-time on the Ontario Securities Commission (until 1991).

In 1992 the Canadian Judicial Council commissioned Dr. Friedland to undertake a study of judicial independence and accountability in Canada, on which a report was issued in 1995. He also served as a consultant to the Somalia Inquiry (1995-1997) and to the Attorney General of Ontario on a possible Court Services Agency (1996-1997). In July 1997, at the request of its chair, he submitted a study on the governance of legal aid to the Ontario Legal Aid Review Committee.

While carrying out these public duties, Dr. Friedland established an impressive record as an academic. His career began at the Osgoode Hall Law School in 1961 but in 1965 he returned to his alma mater as an associate professor in the Faculty of Law. He was promoted to full professor in 1968 and dean in 1972, a position he held for seven years. During his sabbatical in 1979-1980 he was Visiting Professor successively at the faculties of law in the Hebrew University and Tel Aviv University, and at the Institute of Criminology at Clare Hall, Cambridge University. In 1984 he was cross-appointed to the Centre of Criminology and made a University Professor in 1985. He is a fellow of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and from 1986 to 1989 was director of its Law and Society Program. He served as acting dean of the Faculty of Law in 1995 and retired in 1998.

Dr. Friedland has played a very active role in university governance. He was elected a member of the President's Council in 1969, the same year that he began chairing the Commission on University Government Programming Committee. This committee reviewed the University of Toronto's governing structure, resulting in the replacement of the bicameral system (Board of Governors and Senate) with a unicameral one (Governing Council). Other committee activity in the 1960s and the 1970s include the Human Experimentation Committee (1965-1970), the Presidential Tenure Review hearings (chair, 1973-1975), the Governing Council (1974-1976) and the Research Board (1973-1976). Since 1978 he has been a member (chair from 1995) of the manuscript review committee of the University of Toronto Press and, from 1992, a member of its Board of Directors.

In the 1980s Dr. Friedland was a member of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Governing Council (1982-1983), of the Board of Directors of the University Settlement House (1982-1988), and chair of the Provost's Committee on the Department of Architecture (1984). He has been a senior fellow of Massey College since 1985 and in 1991 served on the Presidential Commission on Conflicts of Interest.

Dr. Friedland has been much sought after as a public speaker and is a prolific author. "Many of his writings have been cited and relied upon in legal research and judicial decisions throughout the common law world." He has published numerous articles, beginning with several, while still an undergraduate, in the University of Toronto Law Journal. These reflect his interest in such subjects as law reform, legal history, access to the law, gun control, and judicial independence. He has also published sixteen books.

His first book, Detention before trial, a study of the bail system in Canada, appeared in 1965. It marked the first time a professor of law in Canada had gathered empirical evidence on the workings of the justice system and it led directly to the Bail Reform Act of 1971.

Friedland's second book, Double jeopardy (1969), was based on his doctoral thesis. Courts and trials (1975), an interdisciplinary series of lectures given in 1972-73, was designed to show the link between professionalism and the academic study of law. Access to the law (also 1975), prepared for the Law Reform Commission of Canada, was written as a first step in making the law accessible to non-lawyers. Friedland's interest in law reform also resulted in A century of criminal justice: perspectives on the development of Canadian law (1984), which ranged beyond law reform to include various issues on criminal justice. National security: the legal dimensions (also 1984) arose from Friedland's involvement with the McDonald Commission.

A Canadian Institute for Advanced Research project that began in 1985 produced three studies. Sanctions and rewards in the legal system resulted from papers given at a 1986 symposium. The specific issues, ranging from tax compliance to family violence and prostitution, from the second stage of the project were written up as Regulating Traffic Safety (with Friedland as a co-author) and Securing compliance: seven case studies, both of which appeared in 1990.

Dr. Friedland's casebook, Cases and Materials on Criminal Law and Procedure, first appeared in September, 1967. Between then and 1997 U of T Press and Emond Montgomery put out eight editions. Another volume emanating from the University of Toronto was Rough justice: essays on crime in literature. It began as a seminar organized with the Department of English in 1986. The material was polished in later seminars and the book appeared in 1991.

Dr. Friedland has written three true crime books. The Trials of Israel Lipski (1984), about a Polish Jew hanged for murder in London in 1887, won the Crime Writers of Canada

Award for Non-fiction and piqued the interest of filmmakers. An early twentieth century Canadian trial is featured in The Case of Valentine Shortis (1986). It, too, had film potential, but the untimely death of the National Film Board's proposed director derailed the project. The death of Old Man Rice (1994), about the 1902 trial for the murder of the founder of Rice University, added an American component to Dr. Friedland's crime stories; it also aroused considerable interest.

The two latest of Dr. Friedland's books are A place apart: judicial independence and accountability in Canada (1995), prepared for the Canadian Judicial Council, and Controlling misconduct in the military (1997), a study commissioned by the Somalia Inquiry. He is currently writing a history of the University of Toronto (the last one appeared in 1927).

In recognition of his many services to his profession and country, Dr. Friedland has been the recipient of numerous honours. He was appointed federal Queen's Council in 1975 and elected a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1983. In 1985 he received the Canadian Association of Law Teachers and Law Reform Commission of Canada Award for an "outstanding contribution to legal research and law reform." In 1987 he received the Alumni Faculty Award from the University of Toronto. Two honours followed in 1990: Officer of the Order of Canada and the David W. Mundell Medal for "distinguished contributions to Letters and Law." Two more followed in 1994: the Canadian Bar Association's Raymond John Hnatshyn Award for an "outstanding contribution to the law and legal scholarship in Canada," and the Criminal Law Association's G. Arthur Martin Criminal Justice Award. In 1995 he received the Canadian Council's Molson Award in the Humanities and Social Sciences for "outstanding achievements and exceptional contribution to the enrichment of the cultural life of Canada." Cambridge University awarded him an honorary doctorate (LLD) in 1997.

Note: Reference should also be made to Friedland's curriculum vitae and the address on his receiving the Molson Prize in 1995, both of which are appended to the end of the accompanying finding aid.

Series 1: Personal

1912-1997

Records [textual], 0.65 m.

These boxes contain personal materials relating to my early years, my undergraduate years, various correspondence from and to family members and others, materials relating to the immediate family, files involving homes and other property that we owned, my income tax returns, other financial matters, and assorted other files.

There is relatively little material relating to my early years, including my high school years (files 3 and 4). I saved very little of that material. Similarly there is very little with respect to my University undergraduate years (files 5-16). There are no files relating to courses in Commerce and Finance (file 7). There are a few scattered things involving the university fraternity, the University College Literary and Athletic Society (UC "Lit"), U of T athletics, Hart House, and the Historical Club (files 6-13). A few postcards and letters and newspapers relate to the World University Service (WUS) trip to West Africa in the summer of 1955 and the many trips thumbing through the states while an undergraduate and law student (files 14 and 15). Material relating to my time at law school is contained in the "Law School" Subseries in Series 4.

I have included correspondence and other documents involving our children and the immediate family (files 17-27) and letters received from Judy's and my folks while we were in Israel (files 28-30). Letters relating to our times in Cambridge are found in the boxes on Double Jeopardy and Law Reform (Series 5).

There are files relating to the purchase and sale of 169 Hillsdale, our first house, and the purchase and rentals while away of 77 Belsize Drive, our second house (files 31-38). There is also a file on the purchase and sale of property in Barrie, Ontario (file 39). I have not included at this time the material that I have on the purchase from Dean WPM Kennedy's son, Frere, in 1983 of the Kennedy property in Kearney, Ontario, where our summer place is.

I have included a file relating to the estates of Ben and Sarah Garfield, Judy's uncle and aunt, of which I was an executor (file 48). There are also other financial matters in the files, particularly my income tax returns for the years 1963-1992 (files 50 and 52-57).

Other miscellaneous files include records of the Public Lending Rights scheme (file 41), a Cambridge Boat Race Dinner speech that I gave in 1990 (file 42), some correspondence with Jewish groups (file 43), and various who's who entries (file 40).

Boxes: B1998-0006/001 – /005

Note: There are no files (45) – (47) and (51) in box 004.

Photographs removed from files in this series have been placed in Series 9: Photographs

The contents of the file on Nancy Friedland's involvement with the Innis Herald as a writer and designer [box 003, file 24] have been removed to box 005, file 04.

Series 3: Correspondence

1955-1996

Records [textual], 1.48 m.

The correspondence in this series consists of incoming and outgoing letters to a wide variety of personal and professional acquaintances of Professor Friedland. Included are many of his students, lawyers (including attorneys-general and ministers of justice), members of the Supreme Court of Canada and of provincial courts, and foreign judicial figures. Some of the files contain letters of reference and appraisals. Included with the correspondence are memoranda, addresses (especially ones relating to the awarding of honorary degrees at the University of Toronto), and some student papers.

In general, correspondence relating to a specific project will be found with that project. Documents that do not naturally belong to another project can be found here. So, for example, correspondence and other documents from Rob Prichard on conflicts of interest are contained in the boxes relating to that subject and correspondence from my Cambridge supervisor, Glanville Williams, relating to my work on double jeopardy are to be found in the boxes dealing with double jeopardy. Other correspondence is filed alphabetically in these boxes.

Series 4: Law School Activities

1955-1997

Records [textual] 0.78 m.

The records in this series document Professor Friedland's activities as a student, professor of law, and as an administrator in his capacity as dean of the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto.

Subseries 4.1: Law School: Student, Professor, and Dean

1955-1996

Records [textual], 0.76 m.

The four boxes in this subseries contain documents relating to my experience as a student, my four years at Osgoode Hall Law School, and my time as a law teacher and dean at the University of Toronto Law School.

There are very few documents relating to my student days at law school (files 2 and 3), apart from my moot factum (file 2) and notes and a small paper prepared for Abe Weston's jurisprudence course and a set of notes taken in Bob McKay's criminal law course (files 4 and 5). I have included several marked-up texts used as a student, including my international law casebook, the subject that was to be the subject of my graduate studies (file 7). (For a description of why I chose criminal law for my graduate work, see my speech to the Cambridge Boat-Race dinner in box 04, file 42). As I apparently tossed out most of my notes when we went to England in 1960, there is also very little from my articling year and the bar admission course. What has survived is one incorporation I did and a number of cases I argued for the firm of Kimber and Dubin and some legal aid criminal cases that I took on my own (files 8-10). Some of these cases were sensational enough to be covered in the yellow journals of the day, in Hush, Justice Weekly, and Tab.

Similarly, there are very few documents relating to my four years teaching at Osgoode Hall Law School from 1961-1965 (file 11). Research notes and documents relating to the Osgoode years can, however, be found in a number of other boxes, such as those relating to Detention before Trial, Securities Regulation, and Double Jeopardy.

I was appointed to the University of Toronto Faculty of Law commencing on July 1, 1965 (file 12). From that period on there is more material. The files, for example, contain some material on the Law School's Research Committee and its Long Range Planning Committee, as well as various other memos (files 13-15).

In 1972 I was appointed as the dean and returned from my year as a Law Reform of Canada Commissioner in Ottawa (files 16-20). The files contain a fair amount of correspondence while still in Ottawa relating to the deanship (file 21). There are also various law school plans and speeches made while dean (file 22).

The many files connected with my seven years as dean between 1972 and 1979 will be found in the normal law school files. I did not go through the files to keep any law school records when my term of office was over. There is, however, a fairly lengthy interview done for the student Advocate (file 23). There are also a number of files dealing with student mootings while I was dean which were not part of the law school records but were given to me by some students a number of years later (possibly in the early 1980s) because they didn't know what to do with them (files 41-44).

In 1975 I started making brief notes of my plans for the coming year (file 24) and kept this up until the present. I usually did these around Labour Day. From about 1980 on I also prepared, as we were required to do, annual reports to the dean on my moonlighting and other activities for the past year (file 27).

Correspondence from 1980 on not found in other boxes is contained in files 28-36. The files also contain material on other aspects of law school life, such as my chairmanship of the Directed Research Committee (files 37 and 38), my involvement as faculty advisor to the Faculty of Law Review (file 40), my membership in the graduate committee (file 48), and my involvement in seeking special salary increases for the faculty (file 39). None of these files is very complete, however. There are also files on my involvement in the law school annual squash tournament, various alumni events, and various talks I gave at the law school (files 45, 47, and 51). Other files deal with various sabbatical plans, various media appearances, and ways in which I coped with the changing technology, including the use of the computer (files 46, 49, and 53). A number of law school pictures are contained in file 50.

Subseries 4.2: Teaching

1962-1997

Records [textual], 0.34 m.

The two boxes of teaching material in this Subseries contain a small portion of my teaching materials. Before each class I would normally prepare a new outline for use in that class and would eventually throw out the earlier teaching materials. There are some examples of the type of notes used for my criminal law small group for 1993-94 in file 16. I have not included my recent teaching materials because I hope to use them in the future to prepare current teaching materials, assuming that I continue teaching one or more courses. There are files in another part of the collection dealing with the criminal law casebook, which I have used in various editions since 1967.

My usual teaching load at U of T was two courses and a seminar or a course and two seminars. The course was almost always criminal law, sometimes a large section, sometimes a small section (files 14-18), and sometimes both in the same year. For several years after I came to U of T I gave a course on securities regulation and one on personal property. At Osgoode Hall Law School I taught evidence, personal property, and gave a seminar on criminology.

For many years one of the seminars offered was on Law Reform (file 7). Since about 1990, I have offered an Advanced Criminal Law Seminar (files 19-27), sometimes with Kent Roach. In recent years, the Advanced Criminal Law Seminar looked at comparisons between criminal justice in the United States and Canada, concentrating on Niagara Falls, New York and Niagara Falls, Ontario as well as comparing Buffalo and Toronto. This area is the subject of research Kent and I did on the Two Niagaras, which is found elsewhere in the collection. The Advanced Criminal Law seminar in 1991 was devoted to an examination of the General Part of the Criminal Law that had been the subject of a report by the Law Reform Commission of Canada (file 21). The work in the seminar formed the basis of a presentation to a Parliamentary Committee by two students and myself (file 22).

Other seminars conducted over the years included an empirically-based criminology seminar in 1967 (file 6), and seminars on Crime and Literature for two years in the late 1980 which are found elsewhere in the collection. In 1983, I ran the Law Review Seminar which that year dealt with criminal law reform (file 10) and in 1984 along with Bob Sharpe I ran the Law Review Seminar dealing with the Charter (file 11). Both resulted in excellent papers by the students published in the Faculty of Law Review. For a couple of years in the early 1980s I gave a seminar on International criminal law (file 9).

Subseries 5.1: Double Jeopardy

1960-1990

Records [textual], 0.33 m.

During articling in 1959-60, I applied to do graduate work in England and the United States. Although accepted (with funding) at Harvard and Yale (file 4), I accepted the Carswell/ Sweet and Maxwell Scholarship for study at Cambridge University that was being offered for the first time that year (file 2). I also obtained a substantial scholarship that was offered by Osgoode Hall Law School if I promised to teach there for one year after I returned (file 3). My wife and I were therefore comparatively wealthy--she worked at a mental hospital just outside Cambridge-- and we bought a red Sunbeam Alpine that we brought back to Canada with us (file 39).

I was to spend one year getting a Diploma in Comparative Legal Studies. My topic was double jeopardy, although I had at first naively thought that I would cover in that one year several 'bars to prosecution'. Glanville Williams was my supervisor. The circumstances of choosing my college and my supervisor are set out in an after-dinner talk that I gave several years ago at the annual Cambridge dinner (file 40).

We returned to Canada in the summer of 1961 and I started teaching at Osgoode Hall Law School. I taught there during 1961-62 and then applied for a leave of absence to be able to return to Cambridge to convert my work into a doctorate (files 8 and 9). This time, funding came from the Canada Council (file 5), with some travel funds from the Law Society. I had applied for a Viscount Bennett Scholarship from the Canadian Bar Association, which, as in 1959-60, I did not get. The file includes all the letters of reference relating to the 1959-60 application which the CBA mistakenly returned to me (file 6)!

There is extensive correspondence throughout the 1960s with my supervisor, Glanville Williams, and with Cambridge University (files 8-10). I required dispensation with respect to shortening the number of terms that I had to spend in Cambridge and various extensions that I required. During this same period, I was researching and writing Detention Before Trial (published in 1965) and was involved in the Legal Aid study and the Kimber Committee on Securities Regulation, all of which made it difficult to complete my thesis.

I had thrown out all my research notes many years ago. They were kept in spiral binders and I recall having well over 50 of them. The only hand-written documents that survived are various versions of the preface (files 18 and 20). Four of the chapters of the manuscript were published as articles before the book was published and in some cases before the thesis was completed (files 16 and 17). The thesis was approved in early 1966. I did not have to go back to England to defend it. Sir Rupert Cross was the external examiner. Gooderson and Odgers were the internal examiners (file 19).

The thesis (Box 2) was published by Oxford University Press, having first been turned down by Sweet and Maxwell, whose scholarship had started my association with Cambridge (file 21). There are the usual files connected with publication (files 22-27).

The book came out at the beginning of 1969. It was widely reviewed in legal journals (file 29) and has been frequently cited by various courts (files 33-36). There are files on the citation of the book by the Supreme Court of Canada, the Supreme Court of the United States, and the House of Lords. I have also included a sampling of citation by other courts.

Subseries 5.2: Detention Before Trial

1962-1993

Records [textual], 0.57 m.

In the fall of 1961, under the auspices of the Programme in Criminal Studies of the Osgoode Hall Law School (consisting of Desmond Morton and myself), I started to explore the possibility of doing an empirical study of the bail system in Canada. Hans Mohr of the Clarke Institute had been sitting in on my criminology seminar and had been encouraging me to do empirical work. Caleb Foote, then at the University of Pennsylvania, had conducted such studies in the United States and I invited him to give us advice on how best to conduct such a study (file 2). The files contain extensive correspondence with others who had knowledge of the area (files 2 to 9), including the Vera Foundation in New York (file 4) and statisticians with the then Dominion Bureau of Statistics (file 9), now Statistics Canada.

I hadn't realised how difficult and time-consuming it was to do empirical work. The bail project had, however, captivated my interest and, when I decided to return to Cambridge to complete my doctorate in January 1963 (see the Double Jeopardy files), I took all my bail files with me and tried to switch my thesis topic from double jeopardy to bail. Glanville Williams discouraged me from doing so, and I therefore had two major projects hanging over my head for several years.

The planning for the project took place in the second term of 1962 (file 8) and over the summer of 1962 I had a horde of summer research assistants helping me collect data from the courts, the police, and other sources. We took all the criminal cases that arose in the Toronto Magistrates' Courts over a six month period--about 6,000 cases (see the preface to the book). An even larger group of law students helped me code the data, which was eventually transferred to punched cards, which produced quantitative data which we could then analyse (files 11 and 12). When I returned to Canada from England in the summer of 1963, I put double jeopardy on hold and started writing up the material on bail. I completed the writing of a draft of the manuscript in the fall of 1964 and submitted it to the University of Toronto Press.

The manuscript was submitted to the Press in December 1964 and the book appeared in June 1965 (file 16). Osgoode Hall Law School had supported the work and it seemed fair to have it appear before I moved to the U of T Law School in July 1965. The speed of publication was particularly impressive because the manuscript needed a lot of editorial work (files 17 and 18, and 20 to 24).

The book was excerpted in three weekly full-page articles in the Globe and Mail in June 1965 (file 36) and was the subject of two programmes of the CBC's Toronto File (file 35). There were a great number of editorials and news stories about the book (files 37 to 42) and there were reviews in Canada, England, and the United States (files 26 to 28).

In July, 1965 I made a presentation to Department of Justice officials in Ottawa (file 29), gave a number of talks on the book (files 31 and 32), and appeared before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in Ottawa in 1967 (file 34). I also supported the Toronto Rotary Club's Bail Project that started in 1965 and which developed into the Provincial Bail Program (file 33).

John Turner, the Minister of Justice, took an interest in the subject. I took part in the drafting of the Bail Reform Act, along with the principal draftsman John Scollin and others, including Turner's executive assistant, Irwin Cotler. The files contain four drafts of the legislation, showing the various changes from draft to draft (files 43 to 47). The files also contain the various Bills that were introduced into Parliament and the Act that was eventually passed in March 1971 (files 48 to 51). There was a reaction to the Act and less liberal amendments were introduced in 1975 (files 52 and 53).

Subseries 5.3: Law Reform

1967-1984

Records [textual], 0.62 m.

In 1968, I received a Canada Council grant to undertake a project on the machinery of law reform (file 2). My plan was to write a comprehensive book on the various techniques for changing the law, from parliament and judicial lawmaking to the new Law Commissions that were emerging in the English-speaking world. In 1969, I gave a lecture sponsored by the Centre of Criminology on the machinery of criminal law reform, which was excerpted and commented upon in the Globe (files 5-8).

In 1969, for nine months, I explored the subject abroad: a few weeks in New Zealand, a month in Australia, and the rest of the time in England (files 9-13). I spent considerable time in London with the Law Commission (file 12) and other bodies. For most of that time, I was in the law library in Cambridge collecting materials and working out ideas for the book. Over the years, I wrote innumerable draft outlines for the book (file 15-19).

When I returned to Canada I was invited to present some of my ideas to the Department of Justice, which, as set out in the boxes on my work for the federal government, helped to influence the setting up of the federal Law Reform Commission.

I continued to work on the book, but in 1971 I was appointed to the Law Reform Commission of Canada, which made it difficult to devote much time to the project. When I returned to Toronto as dean in 1972 I continued to do work in the area, but concentrated on publishing specific papers on areas that interested me, that I thought would later form the foundation for the book. I did a paper, published in the University of Toronto Law Journal in 1974, on prospective and retrospective judicial lawmaking (file 35). Another paper was published in a festschrift edited by Peter Glazebrook for Glanville Williams in 1978 on pressure groups (files 36-40). As set out in the boxes on access to the law, I also published a book on the form of the law.

Throughout the 1970s, I did rough drafts of many areas of law (files 22-34) which I shared with my students in the seminar that I gave on law reform (see the boxes on teaching). Boxes of law reform materials were set out for their and my use (file 14). I also did considerable work on a paper, which was never completed, involving the House of Lords case of DPP v. Smith, which was the first subject dealt with by the English Law Commission (file 41).

When I concluded my term as dean in June 1979, I went to Israel for the fall and to England for the spring. I was determined to come to grips with the great amount of material that I had collected and to publish a book on law reform. While in Israel I taught a course on law reform at the Hebrew University while working at Tel Aviv University (we lived in Netanya) (file 42). I commenced work on the subject of codification (file 42) which was to form a chapter of the book, but as described in the box of materials on R. S. Wright's code, I spent most of my time in England researching and writing the article on Wright's code.

When I returned to Toronto I wanted to find some way of completing the project. I decided to do a book of essays on law reform (files 46-49) and submitted a manuscript to the U of T Press (file 48). The book didn't hang together, however, and eventually I withdrew it from the Press and published it with Carswells (files 51-60) in a different format under the title, A Century of Criminal Justice: Perspectives on the Development of Canadian Law, basing the main title on the paper that I did for the Royal Society for its Centenary celebration in 1982 (see boxes on other professional activities). I added articles that I had published in the last few years, plus an additional unpublished paper on the constitution and the criminal law. The book was published in 1984 and received good reviews. It did not, however, purport to be a book on law reform, although many of the essays dealt with aspects of the subject. It was simply a book on various essays on criminal justice. That ended my long involvement in attempting to publish a book on law reform. Still, I have never left my interest in the area. Indeed, today (January 20, 1998) I gave a talk at a workshop at the law school on commissions and committees, discussing the Somalia and Krever inquiries, and in preparation reread my very rough draft on the subject from the mid 1970s.

Subseries 5.4: Criminal Law Casebook

1967-1996

Records [textual], 0.40 m.

The first edition of my casebook, Cases and Materials on Criminal Law and Procedure, appeared for use in September 1967. That edition was published in a typed version by the University of Toronto Press. The following year they put out a typeset edition, which Frances Halpenny copy-edited over one weekend. The U of T Press put out five editions and decided that they would not produce a sixth, in part because the casebook was loosing the market and in part because they were getting out of the casebook business. A number of versions were prepared by me in house at the Law School and eventually Emond Montgomery put out the sixth edition in 1991, a seventh in 1994, and an eighth in 1997. Kent Roach joined with me as the co-editor of the Emond Montgomery editions. In general, Kent was responsible for the criminal procedure chapters and the sentencing material. I was responsible for the rest. In the sixth edition, we switched from the Truscott case as a case study to the Marshall case. The extensive correspondence relating to the various editions is included in files 18-21. Three of the editions which I had marked up while teaching, the fifth, sixth, and the seventh editions, are also included in the materials (files 10, 14, and 16).

Subseries 5.5: Courts and Trials

1972-1977

Records [textual], 0.14 m.

After I was appointed dean in early 1972, I started to organise an interdisciplinary series of lectures on courts and trials (file 2). This was designed to make a statement that we were not just a professional school but were part of the University. The series was widely advertised and was given every few weeks throughout the academic year 1972-73 (files 3-4). The contributors were from a wide array of disciplines--Reg Allen in philosophy, Don Dewees in economics, Tony Doob in psychology, Jim Giffen in sociology, Charles Hanly in psychoanalysis, Ken McNaught in history, Anatol Rapoport in mathematics, and Peter Russell and Don Smiley in political science (files 5-15). Northrop Frye backed out (file 8), but later contributed to the Crime in Literature series. The series was published by the U of T Press in 1975 (files 17-22) and the book was dedicated to Bora Laskin (file 11).

Subseries 5.6: Access to the Law

1972-1994

Records [textual], 0.2 m.

In the summer of 1972, about the time I returned to the University of Toronto as Dean, I developed some ideas on access to the law which I had been thinking about when I was with the Law Reform Commission of Canada during the year 1971-72 .

The idea was to make the law accessible to non-lawyers who could not--then or now--penetrate the complex legal system, whether it was statutes, regulations, or cases. The scheme was to provide written material that could be digested by reasonably intelligent lay persons. It would combine federal and provincial laws. At the time the idea was to provide this information through encyclopaedias that would be available in public libraries and through intermediaries. It would also assist lawyers and legal aid clinics to find answers to problems and to be able to give material to interested clients. If the proposal were to be developed today, it would use the Internet. (See file 1).

A strong advisory committee was established, consisting of Frances Halpenny, the dean of the Faculty of Library Science, Ian Montagnes, the General Editor of the University of Toronto Press, Peter Russell, the Principal of Innis College, John Swan of the Faculty of Law, and Lyle Fairbairn, the counsel to the Ontario Law Reform Commission. (See file 2).

The Faculty of Law was heavily involved in the project because I thought it was desirable to try to get more interdisciplinary and group projects in the Faculty. (See file 3). Simcoe Hall was very supportive of the project. (File 4).

There was widespread consultation with librarians, lawyers and judges, and academics. (Files 5 to 7). Various governmental and non-governmental organisations were also consulted. (Files 8 to 13).

Various funding sources were explored. In the end, the funding was supplied by the Law Reform Commission of Canada, which took an active interest in the project. (Files 14 and 15).

Peter Jewett, a lawyer with Tory, Tory, and who had been my research assistant when he was at Law School, got a leave of absence from his firm to work on the project. He worked with his then wife, Linda Jewett, who was a librarian (she later became a lawyer). They travelled across the country discussing the concept with interested parties. (File 16).

We engaged a number of consultants to examine the present access to the law. Tony Doob of the Centre of Criminology helped us with experiments to see whether lay persons could, in fact, find their way around the present statute book. (They couldn't.). A psychologist, Professor Paul Kolers, and an expert on linguistics, Harold Gleason, as well as experts in library science, Brian Land, Anne Schabas, Katherine Packer, and Alice Janisch, prepared papers for us. Various individuals assisted us in the preparation of models that could be examined. (File 17).

On February 8, 1974 I gave a speech on the concept to the Toronto Region Group of the Institute of Public Administration, which was excerpted in the Globe, and was widely reported in the Press. The paper was published in the Law Society of Upper Canada Gazette and Canadian Welfare. (Files 20 to 22).

In 1975, the book, Access to the Law, was published by Carswell/Methuen. Again, there was considerable interest in the concept by the press. See, in particular, the editorial by the Globe. (Files 23 and 24).

Although some progress has been made in developing the idea, the project remains unfulfilled. I had the chance of doing more on it when invited by the SSHRC in 1980 to submit a proposal on the project, but was unfortunately too involved at the time in other matters to take up their invitation. (Files 25 and 26).

The concept still makes excellent sense, particularly because of the Internet. It could be attempted by one province and the federal government to demonstrate that it could be done. In my study for the 1997 McCamus Legal Aid Review, I urged them to recommend such a scheme as part of the jurisdiction of the new Legal Services Commission. They did not do so. I also have urged people in South Africa, where there are very few lawyers, to study the scheme. The scheme remains to be tried in Canada or, indeed, in any other common-law jurisdiction.

1979-1990

Records [textual], 0.2 m.

My sabbatical in 1979-80 was to be devoted to the process of law reform. While in Israel in the fall working on codification of the criminal law, I became interested in R.S. Wright and his Jamaica Code. I couldn't discover very much about it. I wanted to add it as a footnote to what I was writing. Professor Yoram Schachar, then at the Hebrew University, urged me to go to the Public Record Office in London, where he had done work (file 4) and where I had never been. When I got to England at the end of December 1979 I went to the PRO at Kew Gardens. I spent most of the remaining part of the sabbatical working on the RS Wright story comparing his code with that of James Fitzjames Stephen (files 2-12). In the end, rather than one footnote, it had 324 footnotes (file 12). It was the first time that I told a story and I enjoyed the archival work so much that it led naturally to my later murder books.

The article, "R.S. Wright's Model Criminal Code--a Forgotten Chapter in the History of the Criminal Law," was published in the new Oxford Journal of Legal Studies (file 12). It is my favourite article by far. I gave a talk on it--'Old and New Criminal Codes'--at the University of Windsor and at other law Schools (files 14 and 16). The Windsor talk was published in the Law Society of Upper Canada Gazette (file 15). In 1990, I gave a talk at the Washington meeting of the Society for the Reform of the Criminal Law on Codification in the Commonwealth, based on the Wright story, which was published in the Criminal Law Forum (files 17-19).

Subseries 5.8: Lipski

1981-1989

Records [textual], 1.4 m.

In the Spring of 1981, I started looking for a project that would build on my interest in Mr. Justice James Fitzjames Stephen, who had played a prominent role in the article on criminal codes that I had completed on my sabbatical in 1979-80. I knew that Stephen had been involved in a number of interesting murder cases, such as the Maybrick case. I started to play around with a plot, perhaps a fictional one, that would involve Stephen, the Maybrick murder case, and Stephen's son, J.K. Stephen, who may have been Jack the Ripper. In the course of this speculative investigation I came across the Lipski case. (See file 10.)

I had earlier seen brief references to the Lipski case that Stephen had tried in 1887, but did not know much about it except for the fact that Lipski was a Polish Jew and was hanged for murder. I looked through the London Times microfilm of the case that took place over the summer of 1887. The case was a fascinating one and I wrote to England to see if there were records on the case. They had records and even though they were closed for 100 years they would make them available for me. I was going over to England that summer to give a paper at the Cambridge Lectures and made arrangements to view the documents at the Home Office (file 2). The papers were very extensive (files 88-93) and there was also a transcript of the two-day trial (files 94 & 95). I arranged to have the documents copied and sent to me in Canada.

I quickly concluded that the case was an excellent one to explore the frailty of the criminal process and various other issues that interested me, such as Jewish immigration to England. It would also enable me to show the danger of capital punishment. One of the files I have included in this collection contains notes that I made in the 1960s on the issue of capital punishment (file 3).

There were, of course, many documents in other libraries and archives (file 4). The Cambridge Library, for example, contained the Stephen papers -- papers that I had used in the R. S. Wright article -- which included letters that Stephen had sent to his wife in the country during the trial and which showed what was going through his mind during the trial and in the later fight for a reprieve.

John Atkinson, a law student, was my research assistant that summer and did excellent work in helping me find material putting the case in the social and economic context of the times. He also helped me the following summer in Canada as well as in London where he spent a month in various libraries (See file 8.). (John died from cancer shortly after graduating from Law School. I gave the eulogy at his funeral. It has not been easy sorting through the file containing his notes.) Another excellent research assistant was Stephen Perry, who had just graduated from the Law School and had returned to Oxford to complete his doctorate in jurisprudence. (He is now teaching at the University of Pennsylvania Law School.) He visited various archives for me in England in the fall of 1981 (file 9).

There was extensive correspondence with a large number of persons who had expertise in the various subjects covered in the manuscript (files 5 to 7). Some were experts on immigration to England, some on life in the East End of London, some on W. T. Stead, the journalist, who played a prominent role in the case, some on locked-door murder mysteries, and many others topics.

I have kept only a small part--perhaps about 10%--of my research files dealing with the case. Most had been culled earlier. Those kept include a number of spiral binders which show, to some extent, the chronological development of my ideas (files 10-13) and various specific files that may be of particular interest to future researchers. These include research on Jack the Ripper, locked-door mysteries, Rabbi Simeon Singer, W. T. Stead, and immigration matters (files 14-24).

There is no complete hand-written draft of the manuscript. It seems that I had my secretary type short hand-written sections after I had completed them. Some of these early drafts that I did keep are contained in various files in the collection (files 1, 25, 26, and 30).

In early drafts I gave away in the opening the fact that Lipski was hanged (see file 1). In later drafts, however, I decided that because virtually no one knew the Lipski case, I would keep back from the reader the fact that he was hanged, although I would state at the outset that he was convicted. The drama in the case would therefore turn on the issue of whether there would be a reprieve.

The book went through various typed and word-processed drafts (files 27-29, 53-56). The endnotes were done after the text was completed (files 30-38). There is considerable correspondence relating to pictures that were used in the book and for the slides that I later used in the various talks that I gave (files 57-60).

Macmillan London agreed to publish the book in December 1982 and a contract was concluded in 1983 (files 39-46). A number of other publishers had turned it down (file 50). Box 3 contains the various matters pertaining to publication such as author's publicity sheets and catalogues. I was particularly pleased to have Macmillan London publish the book because they were Stephen's publishers a hundred years earlier. Subsequently arrangements were made to have Macmillan Canada distribute the book in Canada at a reasonable price (file 48). The American rights were finally sold to Beaufort Books (file 49). No paperback edition was brought out (file 47). In 1995 copyright in the book reverted to the author (file 46).

A selection from the book appeared in the Canadian lawyer and in 1995 it was given the Crime Writers of Canada Award for Non-fiction for 1984 and was short-listed for the English Crime Writer's Dagger Award for Non-fiction (files 51 and 52). I gave many talks with slides on the book, and did a number of radio interviews (Peter Gzowski and Vikki Gabereau, etc.) (See files 72 & 73.)

The book was widely reviewed in England, Canada, and the United States (files 65-69). The files contain extensive correspondence after publication (files 62-64), including correspondence with some of the reviewers (file 70) and correspondence with respect to the W. T. Stead Society.

There are a large number of files in box 45 dealing with possible movies. An Australian company, the principal of which was the murdered woman's granddaughter, took an option on the book and came fairly close to getting the financing for a movie (files 75-84). It had some of the leading character actors in England, such as John Mills and Leo McKern, lined up to play roles in the movie (file 83). A number of Canadian directors and producers, such as Pat Ferns and Beryl Fox, took an interest in the project, but nothing concrete developed. An American company also took an interest in the book, but again, nothing came of it (file 85). As I state later with respect to my other murder books, I'm still hoping!

Subseries 5.9: Charter of Rights and Freedoms

1980-1984

Records [textual], 0.2 m.

My active involvement with the Charter began in July 1980 (a few days after our return from England) when I attended the first meeting of the Canadian Jewish Congress' Select Committee on the Constitution, chaired by Max Cohen and which included Harry Arthurs, David Lewis, Irwin Cotler, John I. Laskin and Marv Catzman (files 3-10). My assignment was to do a paper on Legal Rights under the Charter (file 6). We prepared a submission for the Joint Committee on the Constitution in November 1980 (file 7). The Committee kept an eye on further developments (files 8-10).

In November 1980 I took part in a joint Osgoode/U of T symposium on the proposed Charter. Again, my assignment was Legal Rights (file 11).

When the Charter was finalised, I gave a number of talks on Legal Rights to various groups, including to the Supreme Court of Ontario judges, the Ontario County Court judges, the Atlantic provinces provincial court judges, the Alberta superior court judges, and the Judges' Day session at the CBA Annual Meeting in August 1982 (files 12-14). The ideas expressed were set out in an article in 1982 in the Criminal Law Quarterly (file 15).

My next involvement was at the annual CIAJ Conference in Winnipeg in October 1983, which was then published in the Manitoba Law Review (files 16-18). There are also papers on the Charter in other boxes, such as in the 'Other Travel' and 'Other Professional Activities' boxes. Finally, I gave a talk in 1984 to the newly appointed federal judges at Mont Ste. Marie (file 19).

Subseries 5.10: Shortis

1983-1989

Records [textual, graphic], 2.4 m.

The Lipski manuscript had been completed in early 1983 and I wanted to try another case to see if Lipski could be duplicated. I had enjoyed writing it and thought that I had made some good points about the criminal process. I tried to find a good Canadian case from about the turn-of-the-century.

In April 1983 I went up to the Public Archives of Canada in Ottawa to examine their Capital Cases Files. I had worked in the Public Archives earlier when I was exploring the Canadian material on the R.S. Wright article in 1980 and, I think, when I was working on the paper for the Royal Society in about 1982.

I systematically went through all the files over a 30-year period around the turn-of-the-century to see if I could find a good case. All murder cases that ended with a conviction had to go to the Department of Justice to determine whether the death sentence should be handed out.

The Shortis case wasn't immediately attractive because it was a 'why-done-it' not a 'who-done-it'. Still, there were important political dimensions to the case that were interesting and there was good material on the defence of insanity.

One of the cases that I was also considering was the Hyams case from Toronto. It ended in an acquittal, however, and so there wasn't a file in Ottawa. The problem with Hyams was that there wasn't good background documentation, although I had a full transcript. Some material on the Hyams case is in a separate file in this collection ('Other Professional Activities').

Over the summer of 1983 I started collecting material on the Shortis case, the manuscript of which was published in 1986 under the title The Case of Valentine Shortis: A True Story of Crime and Politics in Canada. For four summers I had, as usual, excellent summer research assistants. (See file 5). I engaged in extensive correspondence on the cases (files 6 to 11) and extensive use of archival sources in Ottawa, Toronto, Quebec City, Ireland, and England (files 13 to 15). As I often did, I made my notes in numbered notebooks (files 16 to 21) and at an appropriate time I would write into the notebooks how I would categorize the material (e.g. psychiatry, hanging, Laurier, etc.), xerox the notebooks, cut up the pages and then set up files for the headings. There would be a constant process of adjustment because the categories kept changing. Most of those files have been thrown out, but I kept some because they might be of future interest to others researching that particular event or person, for example, the Minister of Justice, Hibbert Tupper, or the psychiatrists, R.M. Bucke or C.K. Clarke (files 22 to 39). As I worked on each section of the book, I would make rough notes of the material I wanted to cover in that section. Only some of these have been kept (files 40 to 45).

Endnotes were done in a rough manner at the time of writing, then put in a proper form, and then carefully double-checked. The source material for each note was then kept in a separate file. I have only kept the file for chapter one as an example (file 46). The others were thrown out.

The outline of the manuscript kept changing as I accumulated more material and as I thought about how best to present the material (file 3). In March 1994, I presented the inaugural Cullitan Lecture at the University of Saskatchewan in which I discussed the story. That outline essentially formed the basis of the final manuscript.

The manuscript was hand written (files 47 to 51) and my secretary entered it on her word processor, which I would then correct. A number of drafts are contained in the material (files 53 to 55). Gerry Hallowell of the U of T Press copy-edited the manuscript himself (files 56 and 57). I eventually received page proofs (file 58) and prepared an index (file 59).

Pictures were important to the book. There was a full-page picture before each of the 18 chapters that conveyed something about the material in that chapter. There was extensive correspondence in order to obtain the pictures (file 62). The best pictures came from the Notman collection at McGill. The files contain the pictures that were used in the book (file 60) as well as those that were not used, although many were later used for slides (file 61).

I received many comments on the draft manuscript from various scholars. These included Craig Brown, John English, John Beattie, Jack Robson, and many others (file 65).

Publication was by the University of Toronto Press. The various files contain material on the negotiation of the contract (file 66), the process of production (file 68), promotion (file 69 and 74), etc. The book was an optional extra of the Osgoode Society (file 71) which, along with the U of T Press, sponsored the book launch (on a stormy November day) (file 75). I did a book tour of the West (file 76) and to Ottawa (file 77) and did a number of radio interviews (including Gzowski) in Toronto and elsewhere. In 1988, I went to Trinity College Ireland to give a formal lecture as well as a talk on the book. I also went to Waterford, where Shortis was born (file 78). A number of other talks with slides on the book were given in Toronto, Montreal (file 79). I also went to Newfoundland in 1989 to give the Kenneth Gray lecture at the annual meeting of the Canadian Psychiatric Association (file 80). There was a paperback edition in 1988 (file 81). Nothing came of attempts to get a French translation (file 83).

After publication, a number of persons with personal knowledge of the case came forward to offer further information (file 84). The U of T press sent out a generous number of review copies (file 85) and I sent out a lot of copies (file 90).

The book was widely reviewed in newspapers, legal and other journals and there was a two-page spread in the Bulletin (files 86 to 89). I received a large number of letters about the book from person who received copies and some who were reviewing it (files 91 to 94).

There was some activity relating to a film or TV adaptation, but so far nothing has come of it. Telescene wanted to produce it with the National Film Board and were apparently fairly close when Donald Brittain, the person they had in mind to direct it, suddenly died (files 95 to 96). I'm still hoping.

Subseries 5.11: Crime in Literature

1984-1991

Records [textual], 0.8 m.

Towards the end of 1984 I started thinking that it would be interesting to give a seminar on crime in literature. In early 1985 I had lunches with various members of the English department to discuss the project. These persons included Jack Robson, Michael and Jane Millgate, Dennis Duffy, and Brian Parker. (See file 1A.) I talked with the persons they suggested and read--or at least examined--some of the books they mentioned. A series of talks on a range of books in English developed. The series had the strong support of Dean Rob Prichard (file 2) and Tom Adamowski, the chair of English.

The seminar was given in the spring of 1986 and again in the spring of 1988 (files 3-8). At each of 13 sessions a member of the English department talked about the book or books selected for discussion. The students had been told before the summer what books would be discussed. Each student prepared a paper on an aspect of crime in literature. A sampling of these papers is in the files (files 15-18). The summer before the course was given, my summer research assistant, Richard Owens (file 11), gathered material that was placed in the library and gave a start to some of the students doing papers. Most, however, had a strong background in English literature and didn't need much help (files 13-14).

From the beginning, it was anticipated that the papers would eventually be published. The first year was a trial run. The next year the seminar was given, the public was invited to attend. Arrangements were made to include the seminar as part of the Law Society of Upper Canada's continuing education program (file 7). There was extensive correspondence with each of the participants to get various drafts of their papers and then to get the papers into publishable shape (files 20-32). I was greatly assisted in the editing and in writing the introduction by my summer research assistant, Doug Harris (file 12). The University of Toronto Press published the book in 1991 in paper and hard cover (files 37-40). The collection was originally to be called Different Voices (file 34) because of the well-known line in Our Mutual Friend, one of the books in the series: 'He do the police in different voices'. This was later changed to Rough Justice. The files contain various versions of the manuscript (files 41-43) and reviews of the book (file 45). A book launch was held at the top of the Park Plaza, every author's dream (file 40).

Subseries 5.12: Sanctions and Rewards

1985-1989

Records [textual], 0.8 m.

The sanctions and rewards project started in 1985 under the umbrella of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research (CIAR) (see the three boxes of material on the CIAR). I started with an outline of the project (file 2). The first stage was a symposium at Millcroft Inn in May 1986 (files 3-5). A number of distinguished experts from a range of disciplines (files 7-16) were invited to prepare papers which were presented before a group which consisted of those who would be involved in doing specific projects and others interested in the area (file 22). Throughout the project I kept spiral binders--29 in all-- of material that was of interest for all stages of the project (files 34-43). The U of T press published the papers in 1989 as Sanctions and Rewards in the Legal System (files 24-31), which was well received (files 32-33).

The next stage involved specific projects (file 44-51). In all but one case (Don Dewees), more than one person worked on the project. The projects ranged from tax compliance and securities regulation to family violence and prostitution. A paper on traffic safety, which is the subject of another set of boxes, was also included. There were a number of meetings of the group as a whole (file 44). The U of T Press published the collection in 1990 as Securing Compliance: Seven Case Studies (files 52-61)

The final stage was to be further projects (files 63-66), but for reasons that were set out in the CIAR files these were not attempted.

In 1986-87 I worked on an article that I called 'View from the TeaMaster' which analysed various use of sanctions and rewards that could be seen from the then TeaMaster shop on the corner of Davisville and Yonge, close to where I lived. The article was never completed. (files 67 and 68).

Subseries 5.13: Traffic Safety

1985-1991

Records [textual], 0.4 m.

Michael Trebilcock and I worked on Traffic Safety as our contribution to Stage Two of the CIAR's Sanctions and Rewards Project (see Series 5, Subseries 12). We started in 1985 and worked on the project on and off for the next four years. In the early stages we were hoping that George Priest of Yale would be part of the team, but this didn't work out (file 2). Kent Roach worked on the project as a summer student and became a joint author. He did a directed research project on drunk driving in his third year at the Law School (file 29). A number of persons were actively involved with the project (files 3-12), particularly Ezra Hauer of Engineering (file 4). We also had extensive contact with two persons, John Adams and Gerry Wilde (files 3 and 7), who supported the concept of 'risk homeostasis' which suggested that changing the rules or improving safety didn't result in the saving of lives. We didn't accept this intriguing thesis, but rather were greatly influenced by William Haddon's ideas on an epidemiological approach to traffic safety (file 18). My brother in law, Barry Pless, an epidemiologist at McGill, also contributed to the study (file 5), as did many others.

I gave a number of talks on the subject (files 13-16). We also conducted a minor test to see what it felt like to be over the legal limit (file 19). The files contain the many drafts that we did over the years (files 20-39). They do not contain any of our notes, although some of mine are contained in the spiral binders in the Sanctions and Rewards boxes. The U of T Press published the study as a chapter in Securing Compliance and as a separate volume, Regulating Traffic Safety (files 40-42). We did not go on to a Stage Three project (file 45).

Subseries 5.14: Old Man Rice

Records [textual, graphic], 0.8 m.

My book, The Case of Valentine Shortis, was to be published in the spring of 1986. That summer, I explored the possibility of doing an American true-crime case to form a trilogy with my Lipski and Shortis books. With the help of my summer research assistant, Tim Endicott, I looked at murder cases in New York City from about 1890 to the First World War, which had numerous entries in the index to the New York Times. Many of these cases already had books written about them. The 1902 trial in Manhattan of Albert Patrick for the alleged murder of William Marsh Rice, the founder of Rice University, had, it appeared, not been the subject of a book and seemed like a particularly interesting case. No American city was then as dynamic as New York City, and I was particularly interested in it because my father had grown up there. Indeed, his family arrived in New York shortly before the time that the trial was taking place.

I called Rice University to determine whether there were any records there dealing with the case. The university archivist assured me that there was a great amount of material (file 3) and that, indeed, nobody had written a book about the case (file 2). This book was far more difficult to research than Lipski or even Shortis. The records were scattered across the continent and the time period covered extended over about 150 years--from the time that Rice came to Texas in about 1838 to fairly recent years. The book, The Death of Old Man Rice: A True Story of Criminal Justice in America, was eventually published by the University of Toronto Press and New York University Press eight years later, in 1994.

In 1996, I donated most of my research documents on the case to Rice University (file 52). They had of course, a strong interest in the records of my research and the development of the manuscript. Most of my research notes and files were sent there, as well as various chronologies and biographical sketches, the hand-written draft of the manuscript, and subsequent drafts.

I kept back, however, most of the correspondence relating to the case, all the documents relating to publication, and all the photographs. I also kept back the original drafts of the preface, and the opening and closing sections of the book (files 12 and 13). In addition, I kept back the various comments on the draft manuscript (file 14) and the page proofs (files 31-32).

The correspondence includes letters to and from handwriting experts, medical experts, embalming experts, and others. There is also correspondence relating to Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, who had been peripherally involved in the case. (See files 6 to 11).

Documents in Box 2 relating to publication include correspondence with those who provided endorsements--James A. Baker III, Eddie Greenspan, Federal Judge John Noonan, and Professor Richard Uviller (file 23). The box also contains the usual correspondence relating to the contract, the copy for catalogues and jackets, etc., and promotion (files 19 to 32). Because I was dealing with both the U of T Press and NYU Press, there are in some cases separate files for each press.

Pictures were used extensively throughout the book. About 50 pictures were used (file 35). I had hoped that a photograph could be used before each of the one hundred sections in the book, but the U of T Press preferred to have four pages of pictures at the start of each of the seven parts to the book. A great amount of effort was required to obtain sufficient photographs to enable a good selection to be made. All these pictures, those used and those not used, are contained in Box 73.

Box 74 contains the many reviews of the book in US, Canadian, and English journals and papers (files 47 and 48). It also contains the nibbles that I received in relation to the possibility of a film or TV documentary (file 51). Again, as with the Lipski and Shortis books, I'm still hoping.

Subseries 5.15: Two Niagaras

1990-1997

Records [textual], 0.8 m.

In 1990, Kent Roach, Michael Code and I commenced a project comparing the administration of justice in Ontario and New York. Michael Code had taken a year off from practice to do an LL.M. under my supervision at the Law School (see the preface to his book in file 26). We wanted to find comparable counties on either side of the border and ended up choosing Niagara County, New York and Niagara County, Ontario (file 2). We spent considerable time on either side of the border trying to find similar types of cases from past records that we could compare (file 3). Our intention was to combine a doctrinal analysis of the law with an empirical investigation of what actually happens in the two counties. Some of the various outlines of the study can be found in file 7 and in files 12-14.

We received funding from the SSHRC (files 4-6) and spent considerable time at the various institutions on either side of the border. We visited many court houses and penal institutions (file 16) and spent a number of evenings riding with the Niagara Falls Police on both sides of the border. Some of these visits are recorded in some detail in my notebooks (files 12-14). The work was part of my CIAR responsibilities and I produced a number of documents in that connection (files 28-29).

We built up a great mass of material as can be seen from the catalogue of the many file boxes that we had (file 15). A number of summer research assistants helped collect material (files 17 and 18). I ran an Advanced Criminal Law research seminar for a number of years on the Two Niagaras, often in collaboration with Kent Roach. The boxes of materials were also used by the students to assist them in preparing their papers. A collection of these papers is contained in the files (files 19-25), some of which were later published.

In the end, however, we did not produce the major book that we had intended. All three of us had intervening tasks to distract us. Kent became heavily involved in his book on constitutional remedies; Michael Code became the Assistant Deputy Attorney General; and I became heavily involved in other projects such as the judges' study, the conflict of interest report, and my book, The Death of Old Man Rice. The material we had collected started to get out of date.

We produced a number of major articles, however. Michael Code published some articles and a book on delay (file 26). Kent and I produced several articles. Kent took the lead on an article on policing (file 30), published in the American Journal of Criminal

Law, and I took the lead on an article on the use of juries in the two jurisdictions, published in the Israel Law Review and in a festschrift in honour of Peter Russell (files 31-36).

Series 6: Government-commissioned Research

Subseries 6.1: Government Projects – Ontario

1961-1996 Records [textual], 0.4 m.

This subseries contains material on three Ontario Government projects with which I was involved. Various other Ontario Government projects that I worked on are contained in other Subseries, such as those on Securities Regulation and Legal Aid.

Shortly after I returned from my year in Cambridge in the summer of 1961 I worked with Desmond Morton on a study of gambling in Ontario, with specific reference to off-track betting (file 2). I was counsel to the committee that had been established by the Attorney General. Des Morton was the head of the criminology program at Osgoode Hall Law School, with whom I worked at Osgoode. A report was completed in November 1961, which recommended that off-track betting be permitted (files 3 and 4).

In 1966 I became a member of the Minister of Reform Institutions Committee on Regional Detention Centres which were designed to replace the old county jails (files 5 and 6). Joe McCulley, the former Warden of Hart House, was the chair of the committee, which included as members Anne Dubin, architect Harry Kohl, Professor John Spencer, AM Kirkpatrick of the John Howard Society, and G Arthur Martin. There were meetings throughout 1965-67 (files 7-9). A report was presented in 1967 which led to the establishment of regional detention centres across the province (file 10).

In June 1992 I was asked by the Attorney General's Department to work on a Cabinet submission designed to set up a commission to examine systemic racism in the justice system. Stephen Lewis had brought in a report following the riot on Yonge Street which stated that steps should be taken to deal with racism in the justice system (file 11). I prepared a draft cabinet submission with an accompanying appendix on the research methodology that could be adopted by the commission (files 13 and 14). The files contain material on a meeting of July 23, 1992 at which about 40 to 50 members of various visible minority communities took part. They were led by Dudley Laws, who wanted the commission headed by someone who was committed to his position (file 12). He apparently thought that the Commission had already been set up and that I was the head of it. The commission was later set up following a cabinet submission and Judge David Cole and Margaret Gittens became the co-chairs of the Commission (file 15). In January 1993 I took part in an all-day research workshop organised by the Commission (file 16). They produced an excellent report.

Subseries 6.2: Government Projects – Federal

1964-1989

Records [textual], 0.4 m.

This Subseries contains various federal projects that I was involved with over the years. Other federal projects can be found in other boxes, such as Securities Regulation, National Security, Gun Control, the Law Reform Commission of Canada, and Bail Reform.

File 2 contains material on a conference held in 1964 at Osgoode Hall Law School to examine how criminal statistics could be improved.

Files 3 to 6 set out my involvement with the Canadian Committee on Corrections, known as the Ouimet Committee, which reported in 1969. I did a background study for them on the functioning and facilities of magistrates courts. This required a number of trips in 1967 across the country and to the United States. My major recommendation was that there should be only one level of court for serious criminal cases, a recommendation which was not, however, reflected in the Ouimet Report itself, but is still being debated across the country. The study was published in the Criminal Law Quarterly and was also printed in three instalments in the Globe and Mail.

While on sabbatical in 1969 I had studied the process of law reform and when I returned to Canada I became involved in the subject for the Department of Justice (files 7-10). I set out a series of recommendations in a memo dated October 20, 1969 and met with senior officials and the Minister, John Turner, in Ottawa. In December 1969 I gave a lecture on the machinery of criminal law reform in a series sponsored by the Centre of Criminology (see boxes on Law Reform), which was commented on by the press and the Department. In 1971 I was appointed (as set out in other boxes on the Law Reform Commission of Canada) to be a full-time member of the Commission.

In the 1980s I did considerable work for the Department of Justice on Codification of the Criminal Law. This is set out in files 13-17.

In 1985 I completed a Study for the Canadian Sentencing Commission on Sentencing Structure in Canada, which was published by the Department of Justice for the Commission (see files 20-25).

The Supreme Court of Canada had struck down the Criminal Code's abortion provisions in the Morgentaler case in 1987 and the Department of Justice planned to introduce new legislation that they hoped would be consistent with the Charter. In 1988, the Department asked John Robinette and me to give separate opinions on the proposed legislation (see files 27-31). My opinion is contained in file 31. I'm not sure if Robinette ever did an opinion -- I never saw one-- but perhaps he simply based his opinion on my memo. Frank Iacobucci, the deputy minister, was no doubt responsible for involving me. The following year, John Tait was the deputy and again I was asked, along with Robinette, to give an opinion on further proposals. I gave a series of opinions on various drafts (files 32-34). In the end, of course, no amendments got through Parliament.

Subseries 6.3: Legal Aid

1964-1997

Records [textual], 0.6 m.

In May of 1964, I was approached by the recently established Joint Committee on Legal Aid (made up of representatives from the Law Society and the Government) to see whether I would assist them with their research (file 2). My work on bail, which was to be published the following year, dealt with representation of accused persons at trials (see Detention Before Trial Subseries). With the help of two summer research assistants, I produced a document for the Joint Committee entitled "Legal Aid: Working Papers Prepared for the Joint Committee on Legal Aid", which was submitted in September 1964 (file 3). The Joint Committee's Report was published in March 1965 (files 5 and 6). I gave a number of talks and a CBC Viewpoint on the topic (files 8 and 9). The Joint Committee did not want my document published, but agreed to allow copies to be sent to major law libraries. For all subsequent projects I carefully negotiated the right to publish in advance.

Over 30 years later, in December 1996, the Government set up a Legal Aid Review Committee under John McCamus and he invited me to do work on the issue of governance of legal aid schemes (files 11-13). My work on other areas of governance, including governance of judicial matters, gave me some interest and expertise in the area. With the assistance of three excellent summer research assistants (Rob Brush, borrowed for several weeks from Lerner and Associates, and two students who had just finished first year, Graham Rawlinson, and Katrina Wyman), I submitted a study to the Committee at the end of June 1997. The study, Governance of Legal Aid Schemes, was to a considerable extent reflected in the Committee's report (file 43). It was published in volume three of their report (file 44). The files contain some of the key documents I worked with (files 14-24), the many drafts that the document went through (files 28-29, 32-41), the various comments on those drafts (files 33-35, 39), and meetings with other researchers and the Committee (files 27 and 31). There are very few hand-written drafts. This was the first major project that was composed almost entirely on the computer.

In February, 1998 the Law Society announced that it would be giving up the administration of the plan to an independent body--the key recommendation of my study and the McCamus Report.

Subseries 6.4: Securities Regulation

1964-1990

Records [textual], 0.2 m.

In January 1964, Jack Kimber, the chair of the Ontario Securities Commission and the head of a group examining securities regulation in Ontario, invited me to work with an enlarged committee that was then being set up (files 2 and 7). I was one of three part-time staff persons, the others being Purdy Crawford and Howard Beck. I drafted a number of background memos for the committee (file 4), attended their meetings, wrote the initial drafts of chapters of their report (file 5), and went to England with the committee for various meetings and where the report was thrashed out and more or less finalised (file 3). The report led to legislation in 1966 (file 8).

When I came to the University of Toronto from Osgoode in 1965 I conducted a seminar on securities regulation for several years (file 17).

In 1967, I was invited to be a member of a federal task force on the Canada Corporations Act, sponsored by the department of the Registrar General, whose minister was John Turner (file 9). The task force, under the direction of Bob Dickerson, held a number of meetings that summer (file 10). My task was to prepare material on securities regulation, which was to have some priority in the proposed legislation. My drafts naturally borrowed heavily from the Ontario legislation (files 12-14). Doug Sherbaniuk and I also collected statistics on various subjects (file 11). The work of the task force led to federal changes in the Canada Corporations Act (file 15).

In the late 1980s, I was involved in work on sanctions and rewards in the legal system for the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and thought that it would be instructive to analyse the issues by working again in the field of securities regulation. It was because of this interest that I took an appointment to the Ontario Securities Commission in 1989 and worked with the Commission for three years, attending their weekly meetings and taking part in several hearings. Because I could not, as an academic, participate fully in their then lengthy hearings I resigned from the Commission (files 18-21).

Subseries 6.5: Law Reform Commission of Canada

1971-1995

Records [textual], 0.8 m.

In 1971, I was appointed a full-time commissioner of the new Law Reform Commission of Canada (file 2). I spent only one year in Ottawa, however, because I came back to the U of T in July 1972 to become dean of the Law School. The files contain records of our official Commission meetings, personnel hired, and our struggle to sort out our research program (files 4-8). A lot of effort in that first year was devoted to the task of consulting widely to determine what we should be doing (file 7). The files also contain records of selected projects, such as the evidence project, the administrative law project, and the East York Diversion Project (files 10-13). In March 1972 I gave a talk at the Lawyers Club in Toronto on the work of the Law Reform Commission, which was then published in the Law Society Gazette (file 15).

Box 88 contains, for the most part, records of my dealings with the Commission after I left it. The Law Reform Commission financially and otherwise supported my study, which was published in 1975 by Carswell/Methuen as Access to the Law: A Study Prepared for the Law Reform Commission of Canada. Files on that project can be found in the Access to the Law Subseries in Series 5. Throughout the 1970s and 1980s I did considerable work for the Commission. In the early 1980s I did work for the Commission on national security and helped prepare Working Paper 49, Crimes Against the State, that came out in 1986 (files 19-22). Similarly, I helped prepare Working Paper 63, Double Jeopardy, Pleas and Verdicts, which was published in 1991 (files 25-28). I was also actively involved in the 1980s in the Criminal Codification project (files 29-33). In addition, I was the liaison person for the Commission at the Faculty of Law during part of the 1980s (file 24) and gave a paper on rewards at the Financial Incentive Conference in Calgary in 1990 (file 36). Finally, after the Law Reform Commission was shut down, I took part in a conference in 1994 which helped influence the shape of the new Law Commission (file 37).

Subseries 6.6: Gun Control

1975-1995

Records [textual], 0.2 m.

In the Spring of 1975, I was invited by the Solicitor General's Department to participate in a task force study of gun control, under the direction of Roberto Gualtieri of the Privy Council Office, to see what legislative or other changes should be made by the federal government (file 2). I submitted my report to the task force at the end of the summer of 1975, having worked with a research assistant, Arnold Herschorn, over the summer (files 3-5). With the government's permission, the study was published in the Criminal Law Quarterly (files 6-7). My principal recommendations were that there should be tighter control of handguns and that a licence should be required before a long-gun could be purchased.

The task force's work led to a cabinet submission, government legislation, and regulations (files 8-11). In 1976, I appeared before a House of Commons Committee on the proposed legislation and my article was reprinted in Hansard (file 12). I also gave evidence before a coroner's inquest in Toronto on the need for legislation (file 13).

In 1980, I did further work on the subject when I was asked by the Consortium on North America to deliver a paper at Harvard University on gun control in Canada (files 14-25)). Father Robert Drinan, a congressman, gave an American perspective on the issues (file 15). I was able to get funding for the research through the Solicitor General's Department (files 22-25, 28). The paper was eventually published in the book of essays honouring John Edwards and in my Century of Criminal Justice. I did a full-page article for the Globe on the paper and various commentaries on the CBC (files 27 and 30).

I did not participate in the public debate on the long-gun proposals in 1995, although I sent my articles and my views to the Deputy Minister of Justice to do with as he pleased (file 31). I was sceptical about the utility of the registration of all existing long guns when the real long-term danger continues to be handguns. My solution was to require registration when people used long guns off their property.

Subseries 6.7: National Security

1978-1989

Records [textual], 0.8 m.

Early in 1978 I became involved with the McDonald Commission (files 4 and 5), looking into certain activities relating to the RCMP and national security (files 2 and 3). Over the next two years I worked very closely with the director of research, Peter Russell (files 9-11), and, to a lesser extent, with David McDonald, the chair of the Commission (file 8). I had two first-class summer research assistants, Chris Grauer and Ian Kyer (files 14 and 15). We produced a document at the end of the summer of 1978, National Security: the Legal Dimensions (files 20-25). This was sent out for comment by the Commission and by myself to a large number of knowledgeable persons, including Ken McNaught and John Starnes, the former head of the Security Service (files 26 and 27). I completed revisions to the manuscript before leaving on sabbatical in July 1979, received page proofs in England in December 1979, and the study was published by the Government in the Spring of 1980 in advance of the Commission's report (files 28-30).

I spent the first part of my sabbatical in Israel and the second part in England. I gave a talk on national security issues at the University of Tel Aviv Law School and at the University of London, Leeds, and Edinburgh (files 31-34). The text was drawn from my National Security study and was later published in the Israel Yearbook of Human Rights (files 35-38). While on sabbatical, I also prepared a research paper for the McDonald Commission on entrapment, which was eventually published in the U of T Law Journal (files 40-48). When we returned to Canada in the summer of 1980 I continued to assist the commission by reading drafts of their report and commenting on other issues (file 48).

In 1983, I gave evidence on national security issues to a Senate Committee, under the chairmanship of Michael Pitfield, that was studying the issues (file 51-57). My Senate submission was published in the Globe and Mail in September 1983 as an op-ed piece (file 58).

Since then, I have had only a peripheral involvement in national security issues, apart from a retreat at Meech Lake in 1985 organised by the new Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) (file 62).

Subseries 6.8: Pensions Task Force

1986-1989

Records [textual], 1.2 m.

In late November 1986 I was asked by the Department of Financial Institutions in Ontario to chair a working group or task force on inflation protection for employment pension plans (file 2). The topic was an important and difficult one. The government wanted to do something, but wasn't sure what it should do. Hence the task force. The issue had been in the public arena for some time because inflation was high and pensioners were being hurt and at the same time pension funds had large surpluses, which many companies were claiming was theirs or at least should allow them to take pension holidays (file 3).

The other members of the task force were Syd Jackson, the chair and former president of Manulife, and Cliff Pilkey, the former head of the Ontario Federation of Labour (files 4 and 5). One of our first tasks was to get David Conklin as the research director. He helped develop the research themes (files 6 and 7). We had a suite of offices on Bloor Street (file 8). I hired two summer research assistants, Jeff Trossman from the University of Toronto and Dave Lametti from McGill (file 9). The task force met frequently for the next year (files 11 and 12). In February 1987, the Institute of Policy Analysis at the U of T organised a one-day workshop in which experts discussed the various issues (file 10). We listened. On March 30, 1987 I gave a keynote address to a large Insight conference on pensions in which, with the support of the task force, I outlined some of the issues we had identified (files 13-15).

In the spring, we advertised for submissions and in June and July, 1987, we held public hearings (files 16 and 17). There was also a research symposium for invited experts in July (file 18). In the fall, we started writing our report and held a retreat for three days in December at Westover Inn in St. Mary's to try to finalise our ideas (files 19 and 20).

We were assisted by a great number of persons with expertise in the areas involved (box 2). A research advisory committee was established, consisting of Keith Ambachteer, Shiraz Bharmal, John Ilkiw, Don Lee, Jim Pesando, David Short, and Michael Wolfson (files 26-32). Some of these persons also did research papers for us, as did many other experts in various fields (files 33-46). In addition, we were aided by other knowledgeable persons, many of whom read drafts of our report (files 47-54).

We received submissions from a great number of organisations, firms, and individuals. Submissions that came to the government were redirected to us (files 55-68).

The progress of our work was closely followed by the press, particularly the financial press (files 69-83).

The various chapters of the report went through many drafts (box 98). The final chapter setting out our conclusions and recommendations went through at least 15 drafts (files 100-104). The drafts were commented on by our consultants and others (files 106-117). One of the background studies was a technical report on how pension funds would operate with various inflation protection formulas. Mercers took the primary responsibility for this work, but brought in other actuarial firms (file 118). Their work was eventually published as volume three of the background papers (file 135). Volumes one and two contain the consultants' studies (files 133-34).

In the end, Cliff Pilkey expressed a minority position. Although he signed the report, he would have gone farther in a number of areas, particularly with respect to applying our formula retrospectively (file 119).

After the report was released in February 1988 (files 120-22), I gave a number of talks to various groups, including the Canadian Institute of Actuaries and the American Bar Association, that was meeting in Toronto that summer (files 123-127).

The government was interested in implementing our report (files 129-131). Legislation was introduced by Murray Elston, the minister of Financial Institutions in 1989 (file 131), but in the end nothing was done. Many of the ideas were, however, brought into effect through the collective bargaining process. Part of the reason that the impetus for change was lost was because the economy was starting to lose steam and employers said that any increased cost would cost jobs and might cause the abandonment of defined benefit plans. Moreover, inflation was starting to be lower and this decreased the necessity for change. As this is being written, inflation is very low--about 2 percent--and so it would be an ideal time to implement our report. But it is unlikely that anything will be done. No one is worried about the problem today. If inflation ever gets to high levels again, however, people will regret that the report was not implemented back in the 1980s or 90s.

The formula that we had suggested (75% of CPI - 1 % of that sum) was resurrected in the 1990s for a different purpose, that is, to use for public programs where some, but not full, inflation protection was thought to be desirable (file 132).

1868-1996

Records [textual], 2.4 m.

In late 1992, I was asked by the Canadian Judicial Council to do a study of judicial independence and accountability in Canada. The Council is a statutory body composed of all of the superior court chief justices in Canada (file 3). Bob Sharpe and Jim McPherson, then the deans of law at Toronto and Osgoode and who had each been the executive officer of the Chief Justice of Canada, played a role in designing the study (file 6). The Council wanted a follow-up to the Deschênes Report on the administration of the courts which Chief Justice Allan McEachern of British Columbia had attempted to write, but hadn't made very much progress (file 3). They were also concerned with attacks on the independence of the judiciary and concern about the disciplinary process. Others had other reasons for supporting the study.

I agreed to do a study covering these and other areas that in my view naturally came within the concept of judicial independence and accountability, such as financial security and appointments. A contract was entered into with the Government in June 1993 (file 4). Over the next year there were numerous drafts of the research outline (file 5).

There was extensive correspondence with the Council (files 6-19), its executive director, Jeannie Thomas (files 124-126), and the four members selected by the Council's Judicial Independence Committee to act as a liaison with me. These four were Richard Scott, the chief justice of Manitoba (files 117-119), Allan McEachern, the chief justice of British Columbia (files 112-113), Roy McMurtry, the then chief justice of the trial division in Ontario (later the chief justice of Ontario) (file 114), and Pierre Michaud, the then associate chief justice of the trial division in Quebec (later the chief justice of Quebec). There were a number of meetings with the liaison group as well as with the Judicial Independence Committee of Council. A draft of the report was distributed to the Council members and others for their comments. In March 1995 I took part in their annual seminar where my draft was discussed (file 13).

Over the course of the project I had a number of summer research assistants. Four outstanding students who did extensive work with me were particularly helpful: Jeffrey Piercey, Poonam Puri, Caroline Ursulak, and Gillian Roberts (files 21-23).

There was consultation with many organisations, such as the Canadian Judges Conference, the Canadian Bar Association, and the Federation of Law Societies (files 26-31). There was also close co-operation with the federal Department of Justice and the deputy ministers across the country (files 32-33). I went to each province and territory and met with government officials, lawyers, academics, and judges (files 34-78). I also spent a week in England meeting with judges, government officials, lawyers, and academics (files 79-86). The extensive correspondence with individuals is contained in specific files (files 90-133), as well as in the files relating to the particular province or court.

Only a very small portion of my research has been kept. The bibliography of materials collected by itself amounted to well over 50 pages (file 139). Parts of some files of particular interest are, however, included in the collection (files 134-138). Box 7 contains my hand-written drafts of the various sections of the report (files 140-153) and Boxes 8 and 9 contain the specific endnote references (files 154-173).

The report was published by the government in English and French in August 1995 (file 174, 179-80). There was extensive media coverage of the report (files 182-88). I had given a number of talks on the subject prior to the publication of the report and a number after its publication (files 189-99). I took part, for example, in the annual conference of the Canadian Institute for the Administration of Justice in 1994, the midwinter and annual meetings of the Canadian Bar Association in 1995, the University of New Brunswick Rand Symposium in 1996, which was published in the UNB Law Journal, and a conference organised by the Society for the Reform of the Criminal Law, also held in 1996, which was published in the Criminal Law Forum.

We prepared for our own research purposes a chronology of amendments to the Judges Act since Confederation (files 202-210) and to the Supreme Court Act since its establishment in 1875 (files 211-217). In addition, we compiled a chronology of all major parliamentary debates on these matters since Confederation. Boxes 11 and 12 contain this material which comprises a unique collection that will be of interest to other researchers (files 218-231).

Subseries 6.10: Somalia Inquiry

1995-1997

Records [textual], 1.4 m.

In the spring of 1995 I was asked by the Somalia Inquiry to do a study of accountability in the military. The Somalia Inquiry was, of course, set up to examine the activities relating to Canadian Forces in Somalia, particularly relating to incidents in March 1993 (file 2). Stan Cohen, the secretary of the Commission, was the person with whom I dealt (files 3-5). We worked out a study which would cover a broad range of issues relating to accountability which would be called 'Controlling Misconduct in the Military'. During the summer of 1995 I met with various members of the military (file 9) and with the staff and other experts involved with the Commission (files 12-17). I had a number of excellent research assistants (files 20-23). Caroline Ursulak, who had worked with me on the Judges Study, helped me with military justice; Rob Brush and Craig Martin, the latter with a military background, worked on a wide range of other issues. Collecting and organising the military material, with which I was formerly unfamiliar, was a particularly difficult task (files 20 and 24).

I produced a very large number of outlines of my study (file 8). In January 1996 I presented some of my ideas on civilian control to the Commission at a closed seminar on accountability in Ottawa (file 10). About the same time I presented some of the ideas in my study at a University College public symposium on violence (file 11).

The files contain some, but relatively few, of my notes on the various sections as well as a number of key documents that I relied on that are not easily available (files 25-40). Other files include the various drafts of my report, including hand-written and copy-edited drafts (files 41-66). Detailed feedback on a draft of February 29, 1996 was given by a number of experts, including former military officers such as Sandy Cotton, Jim Simpson, General Vance, and Douglas Bland (files 57-60). My report was handed in in May 1996 (file 63).

My report, Controlling Misconduct in the Military: a study prepared for the Commission of Inquiry into the deployment of Canadian Forces in Somalia, was published in March 1997 (file 67), shortly before Chief Justice Dickson's Special Advisory Group reported (file 69). The Somalia Inquiry had resisted giving my study to the Dickson group, but eventually made it available on the condition that the Somalia Inquiry had the right to publish their background studies whenever they wished. There was therefore a rush to get my study out before Dickson reported (file 5).

I was also involved with Dickson's group, presenting evidence and reviewing some of their material (file 69). At the same time I was reviewing drafts for the Somalia Inquiry, particularly relating to military justice and military police (file 68). In the end, the Government chose to adopt most of Dickson's recommendations relating to military justice and the military police, recommendations which more closely paralleled my own recommendations than those put forward by the Somalia Inquiry (file 71).

Note: Files 17 – 19 in box 114 have been removed.

Series 7: University Activities

Subseries 7.1: University Activities (general)

1969-1987

Records [textual], 0.6 m.

The three boxes in this series contain records of university activities not contained in other boxes, such as the boxes on university governance, conflicts of interest, architecture, and management studies.

In 1969 I was elected to the President's Council, an institution that attempted to advise the President on matters that would normally be the prerogative of the Board of Governors (files 2-13). As a member of the President's Council between 1969 and 1971 I took part in meetings of the Board (files 14-15) and the Advisory Committee on the Budget (files 16-19), as well as numerous meetings of the President's Council (files 4-13). They were contentious years because the University was facing a search for a new president (file 11), student disruptions (file 12), and the response to the Report of the Commission on University Government.

Over the years I chaired a number of disciplinary hearings at the request of Simcoe Hall (files 23 and 24) and was on a number of promotions and search committees outside the law school (files 26-30). I was also a senior fellow of Massey College and was cross-appointed to the Centre of Criminology (files 36 and 37). I was also involved at various times with other university bodies such as the honorary degrees committee and the Research Board (files 20 and 31). In 1981 I took part in a University of Toronto Faculty Association Committee on alternatives to the Memorandum of Agreement (file 22). Over the years I gave a number of talks around the University (files 21 and 35), including addressing Convocation on two occasions (files 32 and 33).

Subseries 7.2: University Governance

1969-1987

Records [textual], 0.6 m.

In the early fall of 1969 I was elected as a faculty representative on the President's Council, which was an advisory body made up of members of the Board of Governors, senior academic administrators, elected faculty members and a number of others.

The Commission on University Government, often referred to as CUG, reported in September, 1969 (see files 2 and 3) and two of the faculty members on the President's Council were asked to serve on a body called the CUG Programming Committee. Bob Spencer from the Department of History and I were selected. The Committee also included the president of the Association of Teaching Staff (ATS), Fred Winter of the Fine Art Department, the president of the Student's Administrative Council, Gus Abols, and the President of the Graduate Students' Association. I was chosen by the Committee to serve as Chair. (File 9). Both Bob Spencer and Gus Abols (a law student) probably thought that I would be reasonably neutral. I had much sympathy for the students' desire for greater representation, but I also believed that the faculty should play the greater role in the running of the university and should have much stronger representation on any governing structure than the students. I liked the model chosen by the Faculty of Law which had recently added 10 students to the 30 faculty members on its Faculty Council (file 20).

Robin Ross, the vice-president and registrar of the University provided the administrative support for our endeavours and the University provided the necessary funds (file 11).

We met frequently throughout the academic year planning our activities (files 9 and 10). Our task was to find out what the University community wanted. Throughout this period, the ATS (renamed UTFA about this time) had many fiery meetings questioning our procedures (see file 13). We organised a large number of public meetings across the campus in which the issues were debated (file 12). We also arranged for a 'Forum on CUG' in the Bulletin (file 28).

We also received briefs and submissions from faculty members, administrators, students, staff, and alumni (files 14 to 19). A major task was to organise a questionnaire to test the views of the University community (files 21 to 23). The result of the questionnaire showed a desire for a university-wide committee to try to resolve the issues. (See file 24).

Throughout the spring of 1970 we arranged elections for 160 members of the University-Wide Committee, drawn from four estates: 40 faculty members, 40 students, 40 administrators, and 40 alumni, members of the Board of Governors, and others. In the end, the Board did not take up their allotted seats, and so the UWC consisted of 150 persons. (See files 29 to 36).

The Programming Committee worked out possible procedures for the UWC to follow, although the decision on procedures was theirs to decide (file 38).

The UWC met for two full days, June 2nd and 3rd, in the Macdonald Block of the Provincial Government. For much of the month of May, a steering committee drawn from members of the UWC representing the four estates worked out procedures. Archie Hallett, the new principal of University College, was selected as the chair of the UWC. (See files 39 to 41).

The UWC decided that a unicameral system should be adopted and that all four estates should be represented on the new governing body. But instead of parity between faculty and students as recommended by CUG, the faculty was to have a much greater proportion of the seats. (See file 42).

About a year later, the government introduced a bill setting out a unicameral system, with a greater proportion of faculty than students. I appeared before the legislative committee at the request of Acting President Jack Sword and outlined the background to the UWC recommendations. (See file 43). The main difference between the UWC recommendations and the eventual legislation was that non-university persons, including alumni, were to constitute half the new governing body. A further review of the unicameral system took place in 1987 by Edward Stansbury and recommended that unicameralism be continued with a number of changes (file 43).

The files are filled with letters and documents from important University people, including Claude Bissell, Laurie Chute (the dean of medicine), Bob Blackburn (the University Librarian), Ernest Sirluck (the dean of the graduate school), Brough McPherson, John Crispo, and many others.

Subseries 7.3: Faculty of Architecture Review

1980-1984

Records [textual], 0.4 m.

In early 1984, I was asked by the provost, Frank Iacobucci, to chair a committee to investigate problems in the Faculty of Architecture (files 2-9). Other members of the committee were Peter Russell and Christine Varcoe, a part-time degree student at Woodsworth. We met with members of the faculty, students, alumni and other architects, including the Ontario Association of Architects (files 10-16). One of the principal lightning rods for complaints was Peter Pragnell (file 14). Our report was delivered to the provost in May 1984 (file 24). We recommended various changes in the Faculty and were critical of the acting dean, Jacob Spelt, who delivered a response to our report (file 26). Our report did not, however, solve the issues and several years later Simcoe Hall tried--unsuccessfully-- to shut down the Faculty (files 25 and 27).

Subseries 7.4: St. Michael's College, Robert O'Driscoll Review Committee

1976-1986

Records [textual], 0.2 m.

In September 1986, Father James McConica, President of St. Michael's College, asked me to chair a review committee into the dismissal of Professor Robert O'Driscoll as head of the Celtic Studies Programme (file 1). Professor O'Driscoll had grieved against a decision by the principal of St. Michael's, Bill Dunphy, to dismiss him as head of the programme. The other members of the committee, both from St. Michael's, were Professor James Morrison of philosophy and Professor Thomas Parsons of zoology. Material was submitted to the committee by Father McConica, Professor Dunphy, and Professor O'Driscoll (files 5-12). We held hearing over three days in late September 1986 and rendered our decision on October 10, 1986 (files 2-4). We upheld the dismissal. In 1995 Professor O'Driscoll retired from the University for health reasons and died in 1996 (file 1).

Subseries 7.5: Conflicts of Interest

1991-1995

Records [textual], 0.8 m.

In April 1991, the President, Rob Prichard, asked me to be a one-person presidential commission to examine the subject of conflicts of interest in the University (file 3). The request was made in a private discussion at that year's Awards Dinner. It was followed up by discussions with the president, David Cook, Peter Munsche, and others. Throughout the course of the project, I had numerous discussions and considerable correspondence with the president (files 5 to 8). Michael Finlayson, then the vice-president in charge of personnel, had carriage of the development of the necessary specific Governing Council policies (files 9 and 53 to 59).

There were a number of incidents that had brought the subject into prominence, particularly in the Faculty of Medicine (file 2). I wasn't to examine those particular matters, although they would form the background to my study. The issue hadn't been carefully examined in the University of Toronto since John Crispo had brought in his report on the subject in the 1970s. Other universities, particularly those with medical schools were also examining their policies. One incident at Harvard Medical School had attracted a lot of attention when an ophthalmologist claimed positive results from a drug produced by a company in which he had a large financial interest (file 17). There was also growing concern about conflicts of interest in the engineering field as university/industry co-operation expanded.

In September 1991, I inserted a notice in the Bulletin and the student newspapers asking for submissions on a range of issues that I had identified over the summer (file 4). My research assistant, Pam Snively, had collected information for me in June and July while I was away in Asia (file 21). I worked closely with a number of organisations within the University, such as the Ombudsman, the Faculty Association, and the Staff Associations (files 13 to 15). The two faculties that were particularly interested in the subject were medicine and engineering (files 16 to 18). I met with representatives of both faculties. I also met with Principals, Deans, Directors and Chairs (PDD&C), the Research Board, and the Audit Committee (files 11, 12 and 19). Naturally, I collected material from other organisations and other universities (files 24 to 28).

There were a number of drafts of the report (files 29 to 36). The draft of November 13, 1991 was sent to a large number of persons for comment (file 37). I have included many of the replies I received (files 38 to 50). Just before Christmas 1991, I submitted the report to the president (file 31). In mid January 1992, it was published in the Bulletin (file 36).

In early 1992, Michael Finlayson and David Cook started the arduous task of trying to get specific policies through the Faculty Association and the University. I was involved in all stages of this work--from 1992 to 1995-- meeting with persons from Simcoe Hall, attending meetings with the Faculty Association, and commenting on various drafts (files 53 to 59). The policy for faculty members was eventually enacted as university policy in June 1994 (file 57). The agreement of the Faculty Association was prodded by Harry Arthurs' report on the problems at Concordia. His report came out in the Globe the very morning that the Faculty Association was deciding whether they would approve the draft (file 57). Other policies for administrative staff and librarians came later.

Subseries 7.6: Faculty of Management Investigation

1996 Records [textual], 0.2 m.

In February 1996, I was asked by the Provost, Adel Sedra, to investigate some problems in the Faculty of Management. Throughout the investigation, the president, Rob Prichard, took a very active interest in the matter. The situation was potentially explosive. A number of faculty members had complained to Simcoe Hall that one of the professors in the Faculty, Gary Latham (file 7), was being favoured in the delivery of executive programs by Soosan Daghighi (file 8), the Director of Executive Programs and with whom Latham was living. The Dean, Hugh Arnold (file 9), it was alleged, was doing nothing about this alleged favouritism. Neil Hunter, the head of the university's internal audit team had done a preliminary report and had concluded that Latham was abusing the system, teaching very little in the degree courses and getting $2,300 a day in addition to his salary teaching in the executive programs. (See file 2).

I met with the persons directly involved and with most of the members of the faculty (files 5 and 6). I examined the relevant financial and other documents. My conclusion was similar to Neil Hunter's. Latham was teaching too little in the degree programs and was doubling his salary by his teaching in the executive programs. The Dean was also teaching in the executive programs and appeared to be in a conflict of interest in controlling the situation. I produced a number of drafts of my report, which were commented on by the Provost, the President, and Neil Hunter (files 10 to 16). My report was presented in March, 1996 and was accepted by Simcoe Hall. It found fault with Latham, Daghighi, and Arnold and recommended a number of changes to control excessive moonlighting, particularly with respect to the executive programs. It also made recommendations on how a more collegial atmosphere could be developed in the Faculty.

The three principals had an opportunity to comment on the next-to-final draft of my report and did so (file 17). The report was not publicly released. Instead, the president and provost met with members of the faculty and told them the outlines of my report (file 18). The dean set up a Dean's Committee, which I had recommended, and which was similar to a committee we had in the Faculty of Law (file 19). I attended the first meeting of that committee. I do not know whether it is still in existence. My involvement with the Faculty officially ended at that point. Hugh Arnold resigned as Dean about a year later and left the University. Soosan Daghighi also left the University within the last year. Gary Latham continued and in the Spring of 1997 was reappointed to his named professorship.

Subseries 7.7: Other Universities

1983-1993

Records [textual], 0.2 m.

This box contains a number of activities relating to other universities.

In 1983, I was asked by George Connell, the president of the University of Western Ontario, to review the Law Faculty which had been having serious problems (files 2-4). The dean, Philip Slayton, had just resigned. I met with members of the faculty, students, and alumni and produced a report (files 5-12).

In 1992, I was asked by David Smith, the president of Queen's University, to spend a day or two advising him and the search committee about the strengths and weaknesses of the Law Faculty. I met with the various groups in Kingston and produced a short report. I was subsequently asked my opinion of various candidates (file 14).

In 1984 I was asked but declined to let my name stand as a possible candidate for the presidency of York University (file 13).

Series 8: Other Activities

Subseries 8.1: Other Professional Activities

1962-1993

Records [textual], 0.6 m.

These boxes contain files of other professional activities not contained in other boxes. They are more or less in chronological order.

In 1962 I co-authored a report for the Ontario Branch of the Canadian Bar Association on disciplinary procedures for professional tribunals (files 2-5).

In the early 1960s I started to do work on a book on Canadian criminal procedure. The only document surviving, however,--I recall doing a fair amount of work on the project--is a single page on the appointment of judges (file 6). The files also contain various outlines of another book I was thinking of doing on criminal justice (file 7).

When I was in England in 1969 doing work on law reform I presented ideas to the Criminal Law Revision Committee on the subject of cross-examination on previous convictions, which led to a short article on the subject in the Canadian Bar Review (files 8 and 9).

When the FLQ crisis occurred in October 1970 I wrote an op-ed piece in the Globe and later gave a lecture at the University of Buffalo law school (files 10-12).

In the early 1970s I organised a series of lectures at the law school in which criminal lawyers talked about one of their important or interesting criminal cases. The series was taped by the Media Centre, but I don't have the tapes in my possession, and was published by the law school in 1975 (file 13). In 1977 Butterworths decided that they wanted to have the Canadian equivalent of Halsbury's Laws of England and I was asked to serve on the advisory board along with Robinette, Bud Estey, and others. A great deal of progress was made over the next 5 years, but it was eventually dropped for financial reasons (files 13-20).

In 1982 I gave a lecture at the annual meeting of the Royal Society in Ottawa on three criminal cases from the year 1882, the year of the founding of the Royal Society. This was published in the Transactions of the Royal Society (files 21-24).

Another project that I was involved with was a Metro Toronto Police Commission Task Force on Violence, which brought in a number of recommendations (files 25-26).

In 1988 I gave a talk at the Learned's in Windsor on the case study as a vehicle for understanding the law (files 27-29). I dealt with the case studies that I had been involved with (R.S. Wright, Lipski, Shortis, and the Rice case that I was then researching). Similar talks were given at the meeting of the American Society for Legal History in Atlanta in 1989 and at Massey College in the same year (files 30-31). The files also include other possible murder cases, including the Hyams case tried in Toronto around the turn-of-the-century (files 32-33). The material turned over to the archives do not contain my files on the south Asian murder case which I intend to complete when the U of T history project is finished.

In 1989 I became involved with a Royal Society task force dealing with the question of whether smoking is addictive. The government wanted to include addiction on tobacco labels, but the tobacco companies objected. The government asked the Royal Society for a report on the subject (files 34-38).

I gave a lecture on the development of the law relating to police powers at a symposium on policing at the University of Alberta in 1991, which was later published in a book of essays on policing (files 39-40).

In 1992 I gave the annual Viscount Bennett Lecture at the University of New Brunswick on "Canadian criminal justice 1892-1992," on the occasion of the 100th anniversary of the passage of the Canadian Criminal Code. The lecture was published in the University of New Brunswick Law Journal in 1993 (files 43-45).

The files also contain my involvement, including various talks, etc., with a number of professional organisations (files 46-55).

Correspondence with various law review is also contained in the files (files 56-58), as are a collection of selected book reviews (file 59).

Restrictions: Series 8.2 Box 139a contains images of physical evidence presented in court that is graphic and violent. Access to this material may be requested through the University Archivist.

Subseries 8.2: Opinions

1963-1969

Records [textual], 0.4 m.

I gave relatively few opinions on legal cases over the years, apart from those I gave to governments that are found in other files. I did not encourage this type of consulting work, taking the view that it was better to stick with my academic or government policy work. The vast majority of the opinions that I did are contained in these two boxes. The cases that I got involved with tended to be ones of legal or of public interest. These included the Bleta case for Arthur Maloney involving the defence of automatism (file 2), the Tridel case for Earl Cherniak involving the scope of public inquiries (file 4), the Guy Paul Morin case for Clayton Ruby's firm involving Crown appeals (file 5), and the Truscott case for Arthur Martin involving evidence points on the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada (files 9-12).

Subseries 8.3: Ontario Human Rights Commission Hearings

1977-1993

Records [textual], 0.8 m.

From 1977, when I was first appointed to hear cases arising under the Ontario Human Rights Act, until 1995, when I was not re-appointed, I had at least 15 cases. Many of them were settled before a hearing. The cases covered a wide range of prohibited grounds of discrimination. Indeed, in looking over the files I see that all the prohibited grounds were at least touched on in the cases. The prohibited grounds are set out in section 1 of the Ontario Human Rights Code, 1981, which states: "Every person has a right to equal treatment with respect to services, goods and facilities, without discrimination because of race, ancestry, place of origin, colour, ethnic origin, citizenship, creed, sex, age, marital status, family status or handicap.

I will mention here only the cases that involved a substantial hearing. The Kellerman case involved discrimination on the basis of handicap which I believe was the first such case under the Code (files 24-26). The Michipicoten case involved sex and marital status (files 11-16). The Peel Non-profit Housing case involved discrimination on the basis of receipt of public assistance (a new ground) (files 28-41). The Barnard and Commissionaires case involved nationality, ancestry and place of origin (files 18-22). The Metro Toronto Golf Course case involved race, colour and nationality (files 6-10). The Sudbury Police case involved race, colour, ancestry and age (files 44-46). And the Catholic Children's Aid Society case involved race, colour and creed (file 27). Some excellent counsel, such as Brendan O'Brien and John Sopinka, appeared in the cases.

Subseries 8.4: University of Toronto Press and Osgoode Society

In about 1977, I was invited to serve on a revamped University of Toronto Press Manuscript Review Committee. I had served on a large unwieldy committee in the early 70s. The new committee, under the chairmanship of Jack Robson, was composed entirely of scholars from different parts of the University. I have served on it continuously since then (file 2). In 1993 I was appointed vice-chair of the committee and, after Jack's death in 1995, I became the chair of the committee. As vice-chair, I chaired meetings that Jack couldn't attend, including the two years that he was on sabbatical. In 1990 I replaced Jack on the Management Board of the Press and have served on it as a director since its incorporation (file 12).

I have kept very few records of the many meetings of the Committee (file 3) and only a very small number of the many assessments of manuscripts that I did as a member of the committee (file 4). I also kept only a handful of assessments by others (file 5). Similarly, I have kept very few records of the Press Management Board, apart from records for the year 1991, which happened not to have been thrown out (file 13-15).

There are also records of the 1984 Task Force on Scholarly Publishing set up by Alex Pathy and chaired by John Lyerle (files 6-10) and records of the search for a director to replace Harald Bohne, which ended up with the appointment of George Meadows as the Director and later President of the Press (file 11).

There are two files on my involvement with the Osgoode Society, which started in about 1984. Again, I have kept very few records of the many meetings I attended (files 17 and 18).

Subseries 8.5: Canadian Institute for Advanced Research (CIAR)

1984-1996

Records [textual], 0.6 m.

Sometime in 1984 I had been asked by Fraser Mustard, the President of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research, to get involved in their population health project. John Evans apparently thought that I would be a good person to head it. I declined because I wanted to finish my Shortis book, but got involved in the task force that Rob Prichard organised to look at a possible project for law for the CIAR (files 1-5). A group of scholars met during 1984 and 1985 and produced a report for the CIAR (files 4-5). John Hagan, a sociologist at the Law School, who, along with Rob was the co-chair of the group, had produced for the committee a background paper on the future of empirical research in law (files 4-5). The committee also looked at potential fellows and researchers. The Institute decided to proceed with a project in law looking at sanctions and rewards in the legal system.

I was appointed as the director of the program in 1985 and as a fellow of the Institute in 1986. The program looked at sanctions and rewards in the legal system. The first stage consisted of papers by experts in a number of disciplines on various approaches to sanctions and rewards. This resulted in 1989 in a collection of essays, Sanctions and Rewards in the Legal System, which is documented in detail in files in the Sanctions and Rewards boxes. A second stage involved seven specific research projects, which are also documented in the Sanctions and Rewards boxes. These were published in 1990 in a volume, Securing Compliance: Seven Case Studies. One of the specific projects was on traffic safety which Michael Trebilcock, Kent Roach and I published in a separate volume in 1990 as Regulating Traffic Safety, found in the Traffic Safety boxes. There was to be a third stage with even broader studies of certain specific areas, but these never got very far.

The project had shifted towards Quebec. The change had started in 1987 with the 'Quebec Network', which was supported by David Johnston, the principal of McGill and the chair of the Advisory Committee of the project. Rod Macdonald, the dean of McGill Law School, took over as director. The research focus was to be on pluralism, with Harry Arthurs taking over as chair of the Advisory Committee. I was invited to stay on and worked as well as I could within the concept. Kent Roach, Michael Code and I got an SSHRC grant to do an empirical study into the administration of justice in Niagara County, New York, and Niagara County, Ontario. I produced various papers on plea bargaining and other subjects for the many meetings we had.

Rod Macdonald stepped down after 5 years and Liora Salter of Osgoode took over. New members and associates were added. I started decreasing my involvement with the program. The project struggled to find some common research themes, but in the end it was terminated 'for financial reasons' by the Institute, now under the direction of Stefan Dupre.

Subseries 8.6: Other Travel

1979-1996

Records [textual], 0.4 m.

These two boxes contain material on foreign travel outside England and the United States that is not contained in other boxes. Material on Australia and New Zealand, for example, is contained in the boxes on Law Reform.

There are a number of files with respect to Israel (files 2-10). Again, there are also files on Israel in the boxes on Law Reform and in other boxes. In 1979 I gave a talk in Jerusalem at a Conference on Peace v. Violence (files 2-4). My subject was 'Adhering to Rules of Criminal Procedure in Cases of Terrorism'. (The Prime Minister, Menachim Begin, gave a major address). In 1992 I gave a talk at the Canada/Israel Conference on 'Chartering Human Rights' held at the Hebrew University. (Shimon Peres gave a major address). My topic was 'The Charter and Canadian Criminal Justice' (file 5-7). While in Israel I gave a lecture on the Charter at Haifa University (file 8). The following year I presented a paper at a Jerusalem Conference on the Rights of the Accused, etc. on detention and questioning before trial (files 9-10). This was drawn from our Two Niagara studies (see the Two Niagara boxes), but the paper that was eventually published in the Israel Law Review in 1997 as part of the proceedings was one on choosing juries in the two Niagaras.

In 1988 I gave the Moran Lecture at Trinity College, Dublin, on Controlling the Administrators of Criminal Justice (files 11-16). This was an offshoot of my work on Sanctions and Rewards for the CIAR. While in Ireland, I gave a lecture at Trinity College, Dublin on Valentine Shortis and gave a talk on the same subject in Shortis' home town of Waterford (file 17).

In 1991 Judy and I travelled through Asia and I gave a number of talks on the Charter (files 18-25). The talk I gave at Bangalore, India, was apparently published in their law review, although I have never seen it (files 19-21). I visited other universities and institutions in India (file 22). In Hong Kong, I gave a lecture on the Canadian Charter at the Law School at the University of Hong Kong, and gave a talk on the Charter to the Attorney General's Department and the Law Reform Commission (file 23). In Shanghai, I visited the East China Institute of Politics and Law and in Japan I visited the law schools at Kyoto and Tokyo (files 24-25).

Kent Roach presented a paper in both our names on the right to a fair trial in Canada at a conference in Germany in 1995 (file 26). In 1996 I visited a number of law schools and met with government officials in South Africa (file 27).

Sous-fonds: W.P.M. Kennedy Personal Records

1926-1997

Records [textual, graphic, cartographic], 0.6 m.

These papers were acquired by the Friedland's when they purchased the Kennedy property in Kearney, Ontario. The property, consisting of 165 acres on Beaver Lake and the Magnetewan River, was purchased by the Kennedys in 1940 and used by them throughout the 40s and 50s and by their son, Frere Kennedy, until he sold it to the Friedland's in 1983. The Kennedys called the property 'Narrow Waters' after a castle in Ireland and the Friedland's continue to call it 'Narrow Waters'. Because Frere Kennedy spent more time at the cottage than any other of the Kennedy's four children, many of the papers relate to his affairs. The Kennedys normally spent from May to early September at the property. They seem to have put papers that didn't have to be brought back to Toronto in trunks in the cottage. Frere Kennedy acquired the property when his father died in 1963 and used it periodically. He was in the Anglican priesthood in Bracebridge for many years. At the time of writing he is in Ottawa, having taken vows of poverty.

Kennedy was the first Dean of the U of T Law School. A graduate of Trinity College Dublin, he came to the University of Toronto in 1914 and retired from the University in 1949. His academic career is discussed in a paper by Professor RCB. Risk, a draft of which is included in these papers (file 47). Risk's paper shows how important Kennedy was in the history of legal education in Canada. His son, Gilbert Kennedy, did an oral history for the Law Society of British Columbia, which sheds light on WPM Kennedy's career and is included in this collection (files 48-49). Dean Kennedy left very few papers, apart from these that happened to be left at Narrow Waters. Apparently he deliberately destroyed his papers. An empty binder dated 1931, which originally contained papers from September of that year, is included in these papers.

On his 80th birthday in 1959 the Globe and Mail had the following note about his career (file 3):

'Instead of congratulating Dr. W.P.M. Kennedy on attaining his 80th birthday next Jan 8, I should prefer to congratulate him on a distinguished career. To outline it would outrun our space limitations. But William Paul McClure Kennedy, M.A., LL.B., LL.D., Litt.D., F.R.S.C., graduated from Trinity College, Dublin. He was professor at the University of Toronto 1914-26; at Cornell 1926-27; then became Dean of the Faculty of Law, University of Toronto, and held the post till retirement. He performed distinguished services in advising the Canadian and several other governments. He founded and edited the University of Toronto Law Journal, 1935. Among many other works, he wrote the Life of Archbishop Parker, Studies in Tudor History, The Development and Law of the Canadian Constitution, Short Treatise on Canadian Constitution, Short Treatise on Canadian Constitutional Law. More recently, when serious differences had arisen between the Law Society of Upper Canada and the Law Faculty of the University, wise suggestions from Dr. Kennedy led to reconciliation. Perhaps this was his greatest contribution of all.'

What role he played in the conflict is not clear. In terms of other countries, he apparently was involved in constitutional development in Ireland, South Africa, and perhaps India.

His four children are still alive as this is being written. Gilbert, his eldest, went to the U of T Law School, taught at UBC Law School, and then became Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia. The next eldest, Beatrice, apparently had mental problems and was institutionalised for some time. Both Gilbert and Beatrice were children from an earlier marriage. The first wife died in the influenza epidemic at the end of the First World War. Kennedy then married Pauline, a graduate of the University of Toronto, in the early 1920s. They had two children. Frere Kennedy, named after a Professor Frere from Ireland with whom Dean Kennedy worked during his early career in Ireland, also went through the U of T Law School, and later became a priest. Shelagh Kennedy, the youngest, married Casimir Lindsey, a scientist, who later taught at UBC.

Pauline Kennedy, who was noted in various 'who's whos', was a very active volunteer in a number of women's organisations, as her diary shows. She was a major figure in the Cancer Society (files 38-39).

Both WPM Kennedy and Pauline Kennedy wrote very frequently to Frere, particularly during the year 1945 when Frere was in the service. Most of the letters from 1945 are included in these papers.

The years between 1945 and 1949 are crucial ones in the history of legal education in Canada. These letters shed some light on the conflict. The letters from Gilbert Kennedy in British Columbia give an interesting perspective on the conflict between the University of Toronto and the Law Society (files 19, 20-23).

The Kyer and Bickenbach book on legal education in Ontario ('The Fiercest Debate') describes the crucial meeting at Narrow Waters between Caesar Wright of Osgoode Hall Law School, Dean Kennedy, and Bora Laskin, who was then teaching at the U of T. A plan had been cooked up by Sidney Smith, the President of the University of Toronto, and Caesar Wright to have Bora Laskin leave U of T for Osgoode and later the whole Osgoode faculty would come to the U of T. Because Bora Laskin was very close to Kennedy--(note in the diaries the number of times the Laskins visited Narrow Waters)--it was felt that Kennedy's blessing was required. Hence the trip to Narrow Waters to persuade him. He was persuaded and the plan worked to some extent. In 1949, Caesar Wright, Bora Laskin, and John Willis left Osgoode for U of T.

Amongst the letters in the collection are letters from Vincent Massey, Sidney Smith, Louis St. Laurent and Louis Rasminsky (file 1).

Frere Kennedy knew, of course, that I was acquiring these papers along with the cottage, but obviously wanted me to have them, anticipating that I would deal responsibly with them. He visited the cottage on two occasions after we acquired it but never asked about the papers, although he suggested that I would be a good person to write Kennedy's biography. Dick Risk's major paper partially meets Frere Kennedy's wishes.

These papers were shared with Dick. If a full biography is to be written, Risk is the one to do it. But because Dean Kennedy destroyed his papers, it is unlikely that anyone could do more than Dick has done. After acquiring the papers I made the decision to destroy many of the personal papers of family members that didn't relate in some way to Dean Kennedy.

Biographical note

Martin Lawrence Friedland was born in Toronto in 1932. He was educated at the University of Toronto, in commerce and finance (BCom 1955) and law (LLB 1958), where he was the gold medallist in his graduating year. He continued his academic training at Cambridge University, from which he received his PhD in 1967.

Professor Friedland's career has embraced several areas where he has utilized his knowledge of commerce and finance as well as of law. He has been a university professor and administrator, a shaper of public policy in Canada through his involvement with provincial and federal commissions, committees and task forces, and is an author of international standing.

Professor Friedland was called to the Ontario Bar in 1960. His contribution to the formation of public policy in Canada began with his earliest research, a study of gambling in Ontario (1961). Over the next few years his work as a legal associate, consultant, and committee member helped shape the Ontario Securities Act (1965), the Ontario Legal Aid Act (1966), the Ontario Regional Detention Centres Act (1967) and the Ontario Provincial Courts Act (1968). As a member of the Federal Task Force on the Canadian Corporations Act (1967-1968), Professor Friedland contributed to the Canadian Business Corporations Act that was finally passed in 1974.

In 1971 he was appointed a full-time commissioner of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, serving only one year before returning to Toronto as Dean of the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. His study on access to the law was published in 1975 and he continued to do work for the Commission into the 1980s, especially on national security and criminal codification. In the 1990s he contributed to the discussion on the formation of a new Law Commission.

In 1975 Professor Friedland served as a consultant to the Solicitor General of Canada's Task Force on Gun Control and authored a background study on the subject. He has retained his interest and involvement in the issue as it has unfolded in the 1990s. Appointed in 1977 to hear cases under the Ontario Human Rights Act, he sat on a number of boards of inquiry until 1995, when his contract was not renewed. From 1978 to 1980 he was a consultant to the McDonald Commission during its enquiry into the activities of the RCMP and national security, for which he prepared another background study. The result was the Canadian Security and Intelligence Act of 1984.

In the 1980s he served as a consultant to the Canadian Sentencing Commission and to the Law Reform Commission of Canada. The principal issues he addressed were the sentencing structure, a review of the Criminal Code, and offences against public order.

In 1987-1988 he chaired the Ontario Task Force on the controversial issues of inflation protection for employment pension plans. Though legislation was introduced, the report was not, in the end, implemented. In 1989 he took part in the Royal Society of Canada's study on tobacco, nicotine and addiction and began serving part-time on the Ontario Securities Commission (until 1991).

In 1992 the Canadian Judicial Council commissioned Professor Friedland to undertake a study of judicial independence and accountability in Canada, on which a report was issued in 1995. He also served as a consultant to the Somalia Inquiry (1995-1997). Beginning in 1996, a series of contracts with the office of Attorney General of Ontario enabled him to participate in the review of a "range of policy issues that were being debated in the department. These included issues relating to a possible court services agency and questions concerning the devolution of a number of criminal justice matters to other bodies, including devolution of responsibility for the Provincial Offences Act to municipalities." In addition, his involvement in departmental roundtable discussions and the Crown Policy Manual Review Committee provided insights into the high-profile legal cases of Guy Paul Morin and Paul Bernardo, and issues arising therefrom, including "jail-house confessions and forensic laboratories". In July 1997, at the request of its chair, he submitted a study on the governance of the Ontario Legal Aid Review Committee.

While carrying out these public duties, Professor Friedland established an impressive record as an academic. His career began at the Osgoode Hall Law School in 1961 but in 1965 he returned to his alma mater as an associate professor in the Faculty of Law. He was promoted to full professor in 1968 and dean in 1972, a position he held for seven years. During his sabbatical in 1979-1980 he was Visiting Professor successively at the faculties of law in the Hebrew University and Tel Aviv University, and at the Institute of Criminology at Clare Hall, Cambridge University. In 1984 he was cross-appointed to the Centre of Criminology and made a University Professor in 1985. He is a fellow of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and from 1986 to 1989 was director of its Law and Society Program. He served as acting dean of the Faculty of Law in 1995 and retired in 1998.

Professor Friedland has played a very active role in university governance. He was elected a member of the President's Council in 1969, the same year that he began chairing the Commission on University Government Programming Committee. This committee reviewed the University of Toronto's governing structure, resulting in the replacement of the bicameral system (Board of Governors and Senate) with a unicameral one (Governing Council). Other committee activity in the 1960s and the 1970s include the Human Experimentation Committee (1965-1970), the Presidential Tenure Review hearings (chair, 1973-1975), the Governing Council (1974-1976) and the Research Board (1973-1976). Since 1978 he has been a member (chair from 1995) of the manuscript review committee of the University of Toronto Press and, from 1992, a member of its Board of Directors.

In the 1980s Professor Friedland was a member of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Governing Council (1982-1983), of the Board of Directors of the University Settlement House (1982-1988), and chair of the Provost's Committee on the Department of Architecture (1984). He has been a senior fellow of Massey College since 1985 and in 1991 served on the Presidential Commission on Conflicts of Interest.

Professor Friedland has been much sought after as a public speaker and is a prolific author. "Many of his writings have been cited and relied upon in legal research and judicial decisions throughout the common law world." He has published numerous articles, beginning with several, while still an undergraduate, in the University of Toronto Law Journal. These reflect his interest in such subjects as law reform, legal history, access to the law, gun control, and judicial independence. He has also published sixteen books.

His first book, Detention before trial, a study of the bail system in Canada, appeared in 1965. It marked the first time a professor of law in Canada had gathered empirical evidence on the workings of the justice system and it led directly to the Bail Reform Act of 1971.

Friedland's second book, Double jeopardy (1969), was based on his doctoral thesis. Courts and trials (1975), an interdisciplinary series of lectures given in 1972-1973, was designed to show the link between professionalism and the academic study of law. Access to the law (also 1975), prepared for the Law Reform Commission of Canada, was written as a first step in making the law accessible to non-lawyers. Friedland's interest in law reform also resulted in A century of criminal justice: perspectives on the development of Canadian law (1984), which ranged beyond law reform to include various issues on criminal justice. National security: the legal dimensions (also 1984) arose from his involvement with the McDonald Commission.

A Canadian Institute for Advanced Research project that began in 1985 produced three studies. Sanctions and rewards in the legal system resulted from papers given at a 1986 symposium. The specific issues, ranging from tax compliance to family violence and prostitution, from the second stage of the project were written up as Regulating traffic safety (with Friedland as a co-author) and Securing compliance: seven case studies, both of which appeared in 1990.

Professor Friedland's casebook, Cases and materials on criminal law and procedure, first appeared in September, 1967. Between then and 1997 University of Toronto Press and Emond Montgomery put out eight editions. Another volume emanating from the University of Toronto was Rough justice: essays on crime in literature. It began as a seminar organized with the Department of English in 1986. The material was polished in later seminars and the book appeared in 1991.

Professor Friedland has also written three true crime books. The Trials of Israel Lipski (1984), about a Polish Jew hanged for murder in London in 1887, won the Crime Writers of Canada Award for Non-fiction and piqued the interest of filmmakers. An early twentieth century Canadian trial is featured in The Case of Valentine Shortis (1986). It, too, had film potential, but the untimely death of the National Film Board's proposed director derailed the project. The death of Old Man Rice (1994), about the 1902 trial for the murder of the founder of Rice University, added an American component to Professor Friedland's crime stories; it also aroused considerable interest.

His two latest books on legal issues are A place apart: judicial independence and accountability in Canada (1995), prepared for the Canadian Judicial Council, and Controlling misconduct in the military (1997), a study commissioned by the Somalia Inquiry. The former led to Professor Friedland going to Beijing in 2000 to give a seminar on judicial ethics as a part of the Canada-China Senior Judges training program, and the book has been translated into Chinese. Professor Friedland's most recent major writing project has been The University of Toronto: A history, the first university history in seventy-five years, that appeared in 2002.

In recognition of his many services to his profession and country, Professor Friedland has been the recipient of numerous honours. He was appointed federal Queen's Council in 1975 and elected a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1983. In 1985 he received the Canadian Association of Law Teachers and Law Reform Commission of Canada Award for an "outstanding contribution to legal research and law reform." In 1987 he received the Alumni Faculty Award from the University of Toronto. Two honours followed in 1990, Officer of the Order of Canada and the David W. Mundell Medal for "distinguished contributions to Letters and Law." Two more followed in 1994, the Canadian Bar Association's Raymond John Hnatshyn Award for an "outstanding contribution to the law and legal scholarship in Canada," and the Criminal Law Association's G. Arthur Martin Criminal Justice Award. In 1995 he received the Canadian Council's Molson Award in the Humanities and Social Sciences for "outstanding achievements and exceptional contribution to the enrichment of the cultural life of Canada." In 1996, in recognition of his academic and administrative achievements, he was named the first James Marshall Tory Dean's Chair in the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. He received an LL.D. from Cambridge University in 1997, a Doctor of Laws degree from the same University in 2000, and an LLD (honorary) from the University of Toronto in 2001.

When Professor Friedland was awarded the 1994 Molson Prize, the presenter of the award, Lynn Penrod, said in part:

"The Prize I am honoured to present today celebrates the achievements of a man regarded throughout the common law world as Canada's leading scholar in criminal law. Dr. Martin Friedland has blazed a trail of outstanding contributions in an esteemed career spanning three decades. His service and leadership on a variety of reform initiatives involving such issues as bail law, securities regulation, corporate law, criminal law, criminal law and procedure, the administration of justice, pension rights, gun control, national security and intelligence, reflect a remarkable set of contributions as a lawyer, teacher, researcher and citizen.

The special features which distinguish Dr. Friedland from many other renowned jurists are the international quality of much of his work, the rich broad and varied range of his scholarship, and in many cases its direct impact on policy and the law in practice. Much of what he has published is not located in a particular jurisdiction, but surveys the entire common law world and also introduces comparative elements. Many of his writings have been cited and relied upon in legal research and judicial decisions throughout the common law world.

The other striking characteristic of his work is its multifaceted nature. Some of it is rigorous, traditional, doctrinal law. Other parts are contextual and policy-oriented. Some is historical and literary in nature, or takes an interdisciplinary approach to the subject matter..."

Scope and content

13.5 m (94 boxes)

Records compiled by Professor Martin Friedland in the researching and writing of his University of Toronto: A history (University of Toronto Press, 2002). Included are correspondence files, files on the structure of the project, research notes and material, drafts of the manuscript, correspondence relating to publication matters, addresses, photographs, audiotapes, books, pamphlets and other publications.

The records document how the project was conceived and carried out, including the evolution of the manuscript and discussions over the shaping of the book. One consequence was putting the footnotes on line, a first for the University of Toronto Press, and also issuing them in a separate hardcopy volume. The records document the major issues at the University and, by extension, in higher education in Ontario over more than 175 years. The research reports, correspondence from academics, university administrators and graduates from across North America, original material forwarded by individuals, and the commentaries by some sixty people who read the whole manuscript, together provide extra breadth and depth to this historical record of the University.

Arrangement:

This finding aid reflects Professor Friedland's original arrangement of the records into eight series (most with subseries) after consultation with Harold Averill, Assistant University Archivist following the completion of the book in 2002. Upon receipt, further processing and weeding was undertaken by Harold Averill and this final content is reflected in this finding aid.

Accompanying the records was a detailed inventory prepared by Professor Friedland. It formed the basis of the finding aid prepared by Harold Averill. Series descriptions were added along with other descriptive elements required to meet archival practices and the University Archives' standards. Appendices 3 to 10 contain file lists for each of the eight series. Appendices 1 and 2 contain supplementary commentary by Professor Friedland which will assist the researcher in understanding the arrangement of the records and the process of researching and writing a history of the University of Toronto.

Series 1: Introductory material

1997-2002

Records [textual], 0.16 m

This series begins with an address by Professor Friedland on his writing of the history of the University of Toronto and his application for the position. Next are early notes, chronologies, chapter outlines and correspondence relating to getting the project under way. The series ends with more detailed outlines (arranged chronologically by the names of the University presidents) in which many of the issues raised are threshed out in memos with his research assistants: Kelly DeLuca, Charles Levi, Tim Meadowcroft, Michael McCulloch and Sam Robinson. These assistants, all law students with the exception of Levi (who was about to complete his doctorate in history) but with varying backgrounds in other fields (some had doctorates), worked with Professor Friedland over the summer of 1998. The law students returned to their studies in September but worked occasionally on special projects while Charles Levi stayed on as the principal researcher, to be joined in a year later by Patrick Okens whose specialty was athletics.

The files contain correspondence, notes, memoranda, lists, and an address.

Series 2: Correspondence

1887-2002 [predominant, 1997-2002]

Records [textual, publications, graphic], 1.18 m

The correspondents in this series number just under four hundred individuals, of whom sixty-two read and commented on the entire manuscript (these names are listed on page 723 of the 2002 hardcover edition). The correspondents include Professor Friedland's research assistants, archivists in the University of Toronto Archives, officials and editors at the University of Toronto Press, other editors, writers and independent researchers with an interest in the University's history, and members of the public that Professor Friedland met in the course of his research and his giving of talks about the history of the University. The majority of the correspondents are academics and administrative personnel at the University of Toronto and elsewhere who were asked for information or offered their expertise. Some of the correspondence is post-publication reaction to the book.

The research assistants (in addition to those listed in Series I), are Sara Burke, David Bronskill, Colin Grey, Graham Rawlinson and Katrina Wyman. Of the staff in the University of Toronto Archives, Harold Averill was seconded part-time to the project to direct the researchers to the appropriate sources in the University Archives, to offer his knowledge of the history of the University and to read the manuscript. Other correspondents from the Archives are Garron Wells (University Archivist), Marnee Gamble (special media archivist) and Loryl MacDonald (administrative records archivist). The University of Toronto Press, the publisher of the book, is represented by Val Cooke, Ani Deyirmenjian, Malgosia Halliop, Bill Harnum, Anne Laughlin, Melissa Pitts, and Ron Schoeffel. Presidents (past and current) of the University represented are: Robert Birgeneau, Claude Bissell, George Connell, Robert Prichard, and David Strangway. Some of the academics and university administrators forwarded drafts of articles or excerpts from books they were writing, while others commented on the manuscript or portions thereof. Papers or lengthy memoranda and reports are present on a cross-section of activities, disciplines themes and individuals relating to the University including (with the names of the correspondents in brackets). They include the admission of women (Sara Burke), botanical gardens (John Court), chemistry (Susanne McClelland), Connaught Laboratories (George Connell), engineering (Richard White), fees policy (David Stager), gays and lesbians (David Rayside), Jacob Hirschfelder (Sheldon J. Godfrey), Margaret Eaton School (John Byl), history of medicine (Jacalyn Duffin), medicine (David Bronskill), No. 4 General Hospital at Salonika, Greece during World War I (Mary Louise Gaby), philosophy (John Slater), the proposed Wolfe's University (D. V. Anderson), women (Katrina Wyman), and women in graduate studies (Natalie Zemon Davis).

In addition to letters, the files may contain articles, notes, memoranda, background documents and publications, and the occasional press clipping. A few of the files contain historical items, dating back to 1887, that had belonged to early graduates and were forwarded by their descendants, Professor Friedland's correspondents. The detailed comments on the drafts of the book by the correspondents in this series may, for the most part, be found in Series 4.

Series 3: Drafts of the manuscript

1997-2001

Records [textual], 1.54 m

In writing the history of the University, the principal deadline Professor Friedland had to meet was to present a completed manuscript (except for the selection of photos) to the University of Toronto Press by 31 March, 2001, a year before the designated book launch that was to coincide with the 175th anniversary of the granting of the charter to King's College on 15 March 1827. The book evolved over a period of almost five years from his first contact with the Press on the subject in June 1997. The earliest drafts (computer generated) appeared in October and November 1998 and the complete manuscript was sent to the Press in March 2001.

Subseries 3.1 begins with drafts of the chapters (with notes embedded) that were written by Professor Friedland between 1998 and 2001.

Subseries 3.2, "Text", begins with early drafts of each chapter, along with footnotes, sometimes with as many as ten versions for each chapter. Professor Friedland revised the drafts, chapter by chapter, as they evolved following feedback from others, the acquisition of more information, and his own further rereading. By the end of December 1999 he had completed at least one draft of the first 32 chapters, bringing the narrative up to 1960. By mid-September of 2000, Professor Friedland had completed the first draft of the last chapters, 41 and 42 (the epilogue, chapter 43, he had begun writing at the end of December 1999). He usually worked on one chapter at a time, although interesting new information sometimes drew him away to other chapters.

In March 2000, he reread the drafts of the chapters that had been completed (by then usually several versions on), incorporating revisions into new drafts that were printed in April, with another round of drafts in September and October. He again reviewed the whole manuscript in the first week of December 2000, making mostly minor revisions. This December draft was sent to the fifty or so persons asked to comment on the entire manuscript. Further changes were made and a new complete draft printed in February 2001. This February draft was given to the Press as required under the contract. A new printout of the manuscript (again with minor changes) was prepared in April – the first one in which pagination was inserted – a copy of which was submitted to the Press in June and returned as copy-edited. Page proofs were then prepared, Professor Friedland made corrections, and another revised set was produced.

Only those versions with substantive changes that illustrate the evolution of each chapter (which averaged about ten pages, without footnotes) or which document the progress of the project at a particular juncture have been retained. Thus, some, but not all, of the drafts for the various versions of the chapters completed by the autumn of 2000 are found in this series. For the first cumulative manuscript, that of December 2000, those chapters [1-3, 6, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20, 21, 25, 27-29, 31, 34 and 39] that were unchanged from the earlier (September-October) drafts were not kept. For the remaining chapters, some alterations contain only a few words here and there but most have changes ranging from a few lines of text up to half-a-page. For the January 2001 draft only the nineteen chapters with substantial revisions or numerous annotations were retained. The February 2001 manuscript, which reflects the changes incorporated after comments received from readers, has been kept in its entirety.

Subseries 3.3 contains the copy-edited version of the manuscript and various versions of the page proofs. The clean copy of the April version of the manuscript, identical to the copy-edited manuscript except for the editor's marks and the insertion of section dividers and the addition of the "end papers", has not been retained. Both sets of page proofs have been retained.

Subseries 3.4 contains a sampling of drafts of the notes. Professor Friedland, in his "Introduction"¹, noted that there were so many bulky versions of the notes that he included only two versions of the notes, those of summer and November 2000, along with a complete set of the various drafts of the footnotes for Part 4 (chapters 22-27) of the notes. Also included are the notes for Parts six to eight of the February 2001 version of the notes. Some of the versions of the webnotes are contained in Subseries 3.5. A hardcopy of the webnotes at the time of publication (March 15, 2001) was produced as a separate volume.

The various drafts of the manuscript, filed by chapter number within each Subseries, are listed in Appendix 5.

Series 4: Comments on drafts

1998-2001

Records [textual], 0.8 m

In his "Introduction"², Professor Friedland writes, "Series 4 contains the comments made on the text by the many knowledgeable persons who read the manuscript. In some cases the comments are very extensive. Only the pages where comments were made are included. The correspondence files in Series 2 also contain e-mail and letters commenting on the text. Series 4 is limited to comments written directly on a copy of the text. Frances Halpenny, a former managing editor of the U of T Press, started as one of these readers. Her comments were so perceptive and helpful that she agreed to be the principal textual editor of the manuscript."

In addition to Professor Friedland's researchers, Harold Averill of the University Archives, and editors at the Press, all of whom commented extensively, the comments of number of people with diverse backgrounds proved particularly helpful. They include Michael Bliss, historian; George Connell, a former president of the University; Jackie Duffin, a specialist in the history of medicine from Queen's University; Judith Friedland (Professor Friedland's wife), who is writing the history of her department (occupational therapy); Robert Gidney and Wynne Millar, specialists in higher (especially medical) education; James Greenlee, the biographer of Sir Robert Falconer; Donald Guthrie, University solicitor; John Slater, who was writing the history of philosophy at the U of T; and Stephen Waddams, professor of law.

The arrangement in this series is alphabetically by author. For a detailed listing see Appendix 6.

Series 5: Publication matters

1998-2002

Records [textual, graphic], 0.46 m

Professor Friedland notes in his "Introduction"³ that this series "describes the process of publication and includes such issues as selecting pictures, working out the website for the notes, choosing a cover, plans for promotion of the book, preparing the index, and other matters connected with the publication of the book."

Subseries 5.3 is the largest by far and contains the correspondence and related files documenting the selection process for photographs. Subseries 5.1 contains correspondence, documents, and memoranda relating to publication matters generally, readers' reports, cover design, book orders, and events leading up to and the book launch itself. Subseries 5.2, "endmatters", is devoted primarily to issues relating to the bibliography and the index. Subseries 5.4, "webnotes", documents the issues and problems associated with putting all the footnotes on the Internet, the first time this was attempted by the publisher, the University of Toronto Press. Other files relating to webnotes may be found in Subseries 3.5 of Series 3 in Appendix 5.

Photoprints have been removed from boxes 027 – 030 to B2002-0022/001P(02)-(08).

Series 6: Excerpts, talks and alumni events

1996-2002

Records [textual], 0.38 m

Over the course of writing the history of the University, Professor Friedland worked closely with the alumni and publicity offices to ensure that the 175th anniversary celebrations received as wide a press as possible. As a result excerpts from his book-in-progress, articles, interviews and news items appeared regularly in University publications, particularly the University of Toronto Bulletin and University of Toronto Magazine, and occasionally in local and national newspapers. He also acted as an advisor to two alumni calendars that appeared in 2001 and 2002.

As the anniversary date approached, the frequency of these appearances increased, and Professor Friedland was the guest on a number of television programs. He also travelled across Canada, and even to Berlin, Germany, to address alumni groups. In May of 2002, he presented a paper on the writing of the history of the University to the 71st Congress of the Social Sciences and Humanities in Toronto (see box /034(02) and appendix 2).

This series "contains files on...excerpts from the book, newspaper articles, TV and radio interviews, alumni events, and many other matters connected with the 175th anniversary of the University and the publication of the book"⁴ It also contains reviews of the book and some comments thereon.

The files in this series are broadly grouped into three categories and arranged chronologically within each: university publications, alumni publications and groups, and "other" addresses.

Series 7: Research notes and documents

1928-2002

Records [textual, sound recordings], 8.18 m

In his "Introduction"⁵ to this finding aid, Professor Friedland states that this series contains "some [my emphasis] of the research material collected over the past five years"; then describes the arrangement of the files. "Subseries 7.1 consists of the spiral binders I used to make notes of what I was reading and how I planned to handle the material. Subseries 2 contains the notes I made as I tackled each chapter. Subseries 3 is the most extensive collection of material. In it, the subjects are set out in alphabetical order and include persons, places, institutions, and concepts. Individual files may include newspaper articles, research notes, obituaries, academic writings, and many other matters." Professor Friedland threw out a large quantity of material before transferring his files to the University Archives: "Material that is bulky and easily found elsewhere has been excluded from the files. The series thus provides a unique source of information on topics which would take individual researchers many long days or weeks or months to gather themselves. University of Toronto publications, such as the University of Toronto Monthly, the Bulletin, and the various alumni magazines, were systematically gone through during the course of the project and copies of this material have been included in the relevant files."⁶

In Subseries 7.2, "Rough research notes", the files are arranged by chapter (1-42). In Subseries 7.3, "Research materials", the arrangement is alphabetical, "Abols – Zoology".

The files, in whole or in part, that contain information not readily found elsewhere and that illustrate the process of research and writing have been retained. The large volume of photocopied material in the files when Professor Friedland turned them over to the University Archives has been substantially reduced. Much of it is already readily accessible in the University Archives, especially the identified textual records, indexed periodicals, and items from its biographical files (especially A1973-0026 and the 'people files') and 'subject files'.

Entries from the widely available Dictionary of Canadian Biography have also not been kept, although entries from some difficult to locate biographical sources have been. Significantly annotated material and references to sources have been retained (some sources were added when the photocopies were culled), as has photocopied material from sources that would be otherwise very difficult for researchers to locate.

In the course of his research Professor Friedland made careful and extensive use of the files assembled by Robin Harris in the 1970s in his ultimately abandoned attempt to write the second of a proposed two-volume history of the University. Much of the material Professor Friedland's researchers photocopied from this accession (A1983-0036) had earlier been copied from administrative and other sources in the U of T Archives. While references to files in this accession (and others) have been retained, the photocopies themselves, unless annotated, have been removed. Researchers should, in any case, ultimately refer to the original sources, where they are identified, in the University Archives.

Where deemed appropriate, photocopied material in volume has been retained. There are two principal occasions where this was done. First, Professor Friedland had copied the complete run of Claude Bissell's diaries and journals from 1934 to 1971, the year he stepped down as president of the University. These Friedland marked for further copying (the resulting elements were then used to bolster files about individuals, events, groups and organizations that were created by his researchers). Only the pages that were earmarked for further copying have survived culling; they contain the entries that were actually used throughout the manuscript and, with the 'elements' described above, provide a rough index to the diaries.

In the second instance, where indices do not exist items have largely been retained. Journals that are indexed in the University Archives include the student newspaper, the Varsity (1880-1931, 1953-1973), University of Toronto Quarterly (up to 1937, thereafter in the Canadian periodicals index), University of Toronto monthly (1901-1948) and its successors, the Alumni Bulletin (1948-1956), Varsity Graduate (1948-1967), and the University of Toronto Graduate (1967-1972). The last's successor, University of Toronto Magazine, has been searchable online since 1999. The Department of Development maintains a card index for the University of Toronto Bulletin, a journal about the activities of faculty and staff and events on campus, for the years 1980 to August 2000. As the card index to the Bulletin is not readily available to users, dated items from the years it covers have been kept, along with entries from earlier years. Recent years of the Bulletin are now available online.

Some of the files also contain research material, including correspondence, reports and publications, that were forwarded by individuals; these files are identified as discrete units and the material therein has, with few exceptions, been retained in its entirety. George Connell, for example, gave Professor Friedland two large binders of memos, reports, and addresses – some are original handwritten versions – from his years as president (see box 045). Some research material forwarded for use by the History Project has been scattered throughout this series. The principal example here is the index cards compiled by James Greenlee while writing his biography of Sir Robert

Falconer, president of the University from 1907 to 1932. These cards have been retained in their entirety and may be found in boxes 051 to 053 and in those files where the notation in the 'date(s)' field is [198-].

Cassette audiotapes of an oral history interview by James Greenlee with Vincent Bladen have been removed from /042(03) to 001S and 002S; cassette audiotapes of interviews by James Greenlee with Robert D. Falconer, dated 13 July and August 1979 have been removed from /050(12) to /003 to 010S; a cassette audiotape has been removed from /077(14) to 011S;

Series 8: Footnote source binders

1999-2001

Records [textual], 0.81 m

In his "Introduction"⁷, Professor Friedland wrote that "in order to keep track of the vast quantities of [research] material we were producing, we devised a system of making copies of the relevant pages of material cited in the notes. We therefore rarely spent time looking for material we had already cited. There was a binder for each chapter, with various ways of accessing the material. Future researchers may find the material contained in this series, Series 8, helpful in their own research."

Each "binder" (the binders themselves were removed and the pages were tied together with library ribbon) consisted largely of photocopied material from published sources and archival records, along with some research reports, material downloaded from websites, and other 'original' material. Beginning in 1999, Charles Levi went through these binders, tidying up the material, checking and clarifying the bibliographic reference points, retaining the pages and leaves from which citations were made, and circling the appropriate passages in red ink.

The series consists of three Subseries, the first (by far the largest), being the sources for each footnote in each of the forty-two chapters. The last two Subseries, 'additional binder material' and 'further supplemental material, 19th century', contain what their titles convey. The arrangement was (and is) by chapter, originally with footnote numbers on yellow post-it notes firmly taped in place.

For each chapter, all the post-its have been removed (as they have largely been through the other series) and the numbers transferred to the documents themselves. Material that was not photocopied has been retained in its entirety. With the photocopied material, the bibliographic reference points only have been retained and entered on the title page or as appropriate. There are numerous entries from periodicals in the University Archives, especially the University of Toronto Bulletin, the University of Toronto Monthly, the Varsity Graduate and its successors. Here, only the first one or two photocopies from each title have been retained; the other issues referred to were listed, with the relevant pagination and commentary.

Appendix 1. "Introduction" by Martin Friedland

Writing the University of Toronto: A History – An overview

As the first paragraph of the prologue to the book, The University of Toronto: A History, states: "In early June 1997, I received a telephone call from Ron Schoeffel, the editor-in-chief at the University of Toronto Press, asking if I would be interested in submitting a proposal to a university committee charged with deciding who would be invited to write a history of the University of Toronto. The committee, chaired by Father James McConica of the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, wanted a scholarly yet accessible one-volume history. The last history of the University had been published in 1927. In the 1970s, material had been collected for a history, but the project was abandoned. The new history would be published in the year 2002 – the 175th anniversary of the granting of a charter to King's College, the predecessor of the University of Toronto."

A detailed paper describing the issues faced in writing the history was presented by the author at a one-day symposium on May 26, 2002 on "The University of Toronto and its Histories" during the Learned Society meetings in Toronto. That paper is to be published in a special edition of the journal Historical Studies in Education, which is appended to the end of this finding aid.

The finding aid is divided into 8 main series. Series 1 sets out the background to the project, including my proposal to do the project, and the various outlines of the possible sections of the manuscript.

Series 2 sets out in alphabetical order the extensive correspondence I had over the past five years with many individuals as well as with my research assistants. Twelve excellent research assistants helped me for varying periods of time. I also corresponded with a great number of persons who had personal knowledge of the University of Toronto, including former presidents John Evans, David Strangway, George Connell, Robert Prichard, as well as the current president, Robert Birgeneau. Many of the leading academics in Canada are included in the correspondence series.

Series 3 contains the many drafts of the manuscript. Subseries 1 sets out the original drafts containing both the text and brief notes embedded in the text. Subseries 2 contains drafts of the text. Some of the chapters went through 10 drafts. Subseries 3 contains the copy-edited version of the manuscript and various versions of the page proofs. Subseries 4 contains a sampling of drafts of the notes. There were so many bulky versions of the notes that I concluded that I would include in these papers (in Subseries 4) only two versions, those of Summer 2000 and of November 2000 and also include a complete set of the various drafts of the footnotes for Part 4 of the notes, that is chapters 22 to 27. Finally, some of the various versions of the webnotes are contained in Subseries 5.

Series 4 contains the comments made on the text by the many knowledgeable persons who read the manuscript. In some cases the comments are very extensive. Only the pages where comments were made are included. The correspondence files in Series II also contain e-mails and letters commenting on the text. Series IV is limited to comments written directly on a copy of the text. Frances Halpenny, a former managing editor of the U of T Press, started as one of these readers. Her comments were so perceptive and helpful that she agreed to be the principal textual editor of the manuscript.

Series 5 describes the process of publication and includes such issues as selecting pictures, working out the website for the notes, choosing a cover, plans for promotion of the book, preparing the index, and other matters connected with the publication of the book.

Series 6 contains files on the various excerpts from the book, newspaper articles, TV and radio interviews, alumni events, and many other matters connected with the 175th anniversary of the University and the publication of the book.

The most extensive series is Series 7, containing some of the research material collected over the past five years. Subseries 1 consists of the spiral binders I used to make notes of what I was reading and how I planned to handle the material. Subseries 2 contains the notes I made as I tackled each chapter. Subseries 3 is the most extensive collection of material. In it, the subjects are set out in alphabetical order and include persons, places, institutions, and concepts. Individual files may include newspaper articles, research notes, obituaries, academic writings, and many other matters. Material that is bulky and easily found elsewhere has been excluded from the files. The series thus provides a unique source of information on topics, which would take individual researchers many long days or weeks or months to gather themselves. University of Toronto publications, such as the University of Toronto Monthly, the Bulletin, and the various alumni magazines, were systematically gone through during the course of the project and copies of this material have been included in the relevant files.

In order to keep track of the vast quantities of material we were producing, we devised a system of making copies of the relevant pages of material cited in the notes. We therefore rarely spent time looking for material we had already cited. There was a binder for each chapter, with various ways of accessing the material. Future researchers may find the material contained in this series, Series 8, helpful in their own research.

WRITING THE HISTORY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO*

Martin Friedland, University Professor and Professor of Law Emeritus, University of Toronto

One of my favourite short stories is the one by James Thurber about Jack Pal Smurch, who flew a single-engine second-hand aeroplane around the world without stopping – a feat that had understandably never been done before. When he arrived in New York he gave a press conference on a high floor of one of Manhattan's skyscrapers. 'Youse guys,' he gloated, 'can tell the cock-eyed world dat I put it over on Lindbergh, see?' It was reported in the press the next day that Smurch 'accidentally' fell out of an open window – to his death.⁸ I have to be careful not to suffer a similar fate.

The process of selecting me to write the history is succinctly stated in the prologue to the book: 'In early June 1997, I received a telephone call from Ron Schoeffel, the editor-in-chief at the University of Toronto Press, asking if I would be interested in submitting a proposal to a university committee charged with deciding who would be invited to write a history of the University of Toronto. The committee, chaired by Father James McConica of the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, wanted a scholarly yet accessible one-volume history. The last history of the University had been published in 1927. In the 1970s, material had been collected for a history, but the project was later abandoned. The new history would be published in the year 2002 – the 175th anniversary of the granting of a charter to King's College, the predecessor of the University of Toronto.'⁹

How is it, some have no doubt wondered, that a commerce and finance graduate was asked to write the history of the University of Toronto – and perhaps more importantly, actually wrote the history of the University of Toronto? In order to answer that question I have to be somewhat autobiographical.

* Based upon a paper presented at "The University of Toronto and Its Histories: A Symposium" on May 26, 2002 at the 2002 Congress of the Social Sciences and Humanities, held at the University of Toronto. For the original file, see Series 6, box 034 (02).

⁹ Martin L. Friedland, The University of Toronto: A History (Toronto: University of Toronto Press, 2002) at ix.

It is true that I do not have a background in history. Indeed, I did not even take history in grade 13. I note, however, that in the epilogue to the history, where I walk through the campus on the last day of the millennium and reminisce about the University, I describe looking up at McMaster Hall on Bloor Street and recalling my favourite undergraduate classes: 'the memorable lectures on economic history by Karl Helleiner...and the international relations seminar by Jim Eayrs.'¹⁰ Both courses were, of course, rooted in history.

I went on to law school at U of T. At that time a course in legal history was not offered. Yet, almost all courses were courses in legal history. Bora Laskin's land law course, for example, started with the feudal system. Much of the case law we studied in most courses consisted of early English cases, often going back to the seventeenth century. Lord Mansfield, the chief justice of England in the late eighteenth century, was one of my heroes.

It was not until I went to Cambridge for postgraduate work in 1960 that I did any serious historical digging. My doctoral thesis was on double jeopardy.¹¹ It turned out that the historical origins of the concept can be traced back to the conflict between Henry II and Archbishop Thomas à Becket in the twelfth century – and even further back if you include St Jerome's commentary in 391 A.D. on the prophet Nahum: 'For God judges not twice for the same offence.'¹² I thought I would have several sentences on the issue, but ended up two months later with eight pages. I still cannot believe how much primary and secondary material exists on a controversy that occurred over eight hundred years ago.

In my criminal law writings over the years I almost always went back to the origins of the concepts and legislative enactments with which I was dealing. One can see this in my study of the bail system, of gun control, of national security, and of judicial independence, to pick four examples.¹³ Moreover, I had often gone outside libraries to do empirical work to understand how the legal system was in fact working. My first foray in collecting such empirical material had been in the early 1960s when I took 6,000 cases in the Toronto courts over a six month period to study the workings of the bail system.¹⁴ But it was not, however, until 1980 that I actually went into an archive.

I was trying to write a book on law reform and was working on a chapter on codification of the criminal law. I was on sabbatical in Israel in the fall of 1979 and was making progress on the chapter. There were brief references in the literature about a criminal code prepared for Jamaica in the 1870s by a future judge, R.S. Wright, but I could not find anything more about it from the sources that were available to me. I just wanted a footnote. One of the professors from the Hebrew University,¹⁵ who had worked in the Public Records Office in London, suggested that I might find the answer there. I spent the second half of my sabbatical in Cambridge, England, and went to the Public Records Office in Kew to see what I could find. I never got out of the Kew archives. The footnote grew to a paragraph; the paragraph to several pages; and at the end of the sabbatical I had not completed my chapter on codification of the criminal law but had a long article on R.S. Wright's criminal code for Jamaica – with 324 footnotes. The article – my favourite article – entitled 'R.S. Wright's Model Criminal Code: a Forgotten Chapter in the History of the Criminal Law' – was accepted for publication in the inaugural volume of the new Oxford Journal of Legal Studies.¹⁶

The article shaped my future work. In the first place, I discovered how exciting it is to use archival material – the hope that the answer will show up in the next box of material; the absorbing nature of the task, where hours go by quickly; and the challenge of organizing and shaping what has been found. I also discovered through that article that a more narrative form could make the material more interesting and comprehensible for the reader. This was a story of a criminal code developed for the colonial office by R.S. Wright that competed with a code prepared by another future judge, James Fitzjames Stephen. Readers of the article, I have been told many times, were interested in how the contest would end. What would happen to the two principal code makers and what would happen to their codes? Colleagues actually read the article from beginning to end!

I learned a great amount about the criminal law through that article. A piece of legislation is the product of conscious choices. It was easy to see this when one contrasted the acceptance of Stephen's conservative criminal code, which Canada adopted in 1892, and Wright's much more liberal code. This may seem obvious, but I had been teaching criminal law for 20 years and had accepted our criminal code as inevitable, without questioning its origins, and without realizing that a draft tends to reflect the views of the author. The same is true of writing an institutional history and is equally true of the development of the University itself. In both cases there are choices made and alternatives rejected. The University of Toronto we see today was not inevitable. Politics, personalities, and pressure groups have influenced and continue to influence the progress of any institution.

In the course of my work on the Wright article I came across a murder trial over which Justice Stephen presided. A Jewish immigrant from Poland, Israel Lipski, had been charged with murdering a woman in the East End of London in June of 1887. I obtained permission to examine the Home Office records of the case, normally closed for 100 years. In 1984 I published The Trials of Israel Lipski: A True Story of a Victorian Murder in the East End of London.¹⁷ The book was similar to the R.S. Wright article. It took one specific event or series of events – in this case a trial – and used it as a way of examining the criminal justice system. I stated in the preface of the Lipski book: 'This story will place one trial in the context of the social, political and economic conditions of the time. A trial may in theory be an objective pursuit of truth, but in practice there are many subjective factors which influence the course of events. Justice may in theory be blind, but in practice she has altogether too human a perspective.'¹⁸

I enjoyed writing the Lipski book and wanted to see if I could do a similar book for a Canadian case. I went through the capital case files in the National Archives in Ottawa, looking for a Canadian case that would allow me to tell an interesting story and at the same time shed light on the legal system and Canadian society. The Case of Valentine Shortis: A True Story of Crime and Politics in Canada – an analysis of a trial that took place in Quebec in 1895 – was published in 1986.¹⁹

I then turned to an American case. The Death of Old Man Rice: A True Story Criminal Justice in America followed in 1994.²⁰ It examined a turn-of-the century New York case involving a person alleged to have murdered the founder of Rice University. All three murder books increased my knowledge of the 19th century, which proved to have been beneficial in tackling the history of the University of Toronto. Moreover, I should add, as a result of working on those books – and reading student exams for 40 years – handwriting from the nineteenth century never presented a problem for me.

All three murder books are similar. They examine an institution in a scholarly manner, yet try to tell a story that will keep the readers' interest. When I decided to put in a proposal to the committee I said that I would try to do the same in writing the history of the University of Toronto.²¹ I would also try to place the history of the University in the context of the social, political and economic conditions of the time. As it turned out, many members of the selection committee were familiar with my murder books and probably understood what I would try to do in writing the history of the University. In the fall of 1997 I was informed that I had been selected. My formal contract was with the University of Toronto Press and the subsequent process followed the normal procedure of peer review. The financial arrangements were set out in my contract with the Press. Neither the selection committee nor the University had any editorial or financial control over the project.

It has turned out to have been the perfect post-retirement project. I worked on the project more-or-less full time for about four and a half years. I did not teach during that period and had no administrative duties. I was able to keep on top of the material, which may not have been possible if I had had other major responsibilities. I thoroughly enjoyed writing the book.

As I state in the prologue, the history of the University of Toronto is the history of ideas. It is also the history of Toronto, the history of Ontario, and the history of Canada. It is intimately connected with events outside the University. One can, for example, trace over the years the transition from dependence on Great Britain and fear of the United States to the present dominance of American culture and ideas and the decreasing degree of British influence. Life at the University clearly was affected by the two world wars, the cold war, and the Vietnam war. The acceptance within the University of various groups as students and as faculty members also reflects what was happening in society generally. This can be seen, for example, in the 1880s when women were first admitted to University College; or in the expansion of the University in the 1960s because of the baby boomers born after the Second World War; or in the present influx of students caused by the baby boom echo.²² And it can be seen in the mix of races, cultures and religions in the 1990s because of Canadian immigration patterns in the 1960s and 1970s. And so on.

If one looks at the Old Man Rice book one can see that there is a great similarity in the structure of that book and the U of T history. In both I have relatively short chapters. In Old Man Rice the book was divided into 100 chapters and seven parts. In my proposal for the U of T history I anticipated that I would have about 80 chapters, but in the end that was reduced to about half that number. Coincidentally, the history was also divided into seven parts. The structure of the chapters kept changing, partly to keep the length of the chapters relatively equal, but also because there were natural connections amongst various subjects. Chapter 33 on graduate studies in the 1960s, for example, combines a discussion of Massey College, the Robarts Library, and the School of Graduate Studies in one chapter, rather than in three separate chapters, as I had originally planned. Similarly, as in the murder books, I used relatively short paragraphs and short sentences. There are few semicolons in the book, although probably a greater number of dashes than in most academic books.

Another similarity is that I personalized the final chapter in each of the murder books, just as I brought myself into the final section of the history. I was uncertain whether the final walk through the campus would work. My impression is that it does, particularly after I changed from calling it chapter 43 to calling it an epilogue and changed the preface to a prologue.

The U of T history, like the murder books, makes extensive use of photographs. This enabled me to describe scenes and persons through the photographs. Lipski and Shortis had a full-page picture before each chapter. Old Man Rice used 28 pages of pictures – four pages of pictures before each of the seven parts of the book. In the U of T history there are 267 pictures. It took me longer than I expected to collect the pictures. I spent about four months going through all the pictures in the archives and in the U of T development office and other places to select the best pictures. I did not have to describe what Innis or Frye or McLuhan looked like. Their pictures are in the book. Nor did I have to describe the student radicals of the 1960s. There for all to see are Greg Kealey and Andrew Wernick on page 534.

The organization and presentation of the material was a challenge. I wanted to make the history one that people would want to read from the beginning, rather than just concentrate on their own areas of interest. A chronological approach seemed the best way to accomplish this. The faculty of medicine, for example, would be dealt with in a number of places rather than within a single chapter. Similarly, instead of treating broad themes, such as academic freedom, curriculum development, women in the University, and relations with the government, as individual chapters, I would discuss these themes in appropriate places throughout the book.

I was not sure if the chronological approach would be enough to keep the readers' interest and in my proposal I said that I would try to get continuity through the chapters by concentrating on various families with long connections with the University. The Blake family, for example, was one that I planned to use. The family covered not only the first professor of law William Hume Blake and his son Edward Blake, but also Edward Blake's son-in-law historian George Wrong and Wrong's descendents. Shortly after starting the project, however, I abandoned the idea. It proved to be difficult and somewhat artificial to weave their stories through the history and it did not seem necessary. General themes – such as academic freedom, the position of women, and relations with government – gave continuity to the story, as did the physical development of the University, including discussions of such recurring matters as Taddle Creek.

There also appeared to be a natural continuity in the history through the names of characters that would appear and reappear. I tried to be selective in the number of persons named in the book. I had read too many institutional histories over the years that collapsed under the weight of an excessive number of names. Not all vice presidents and chancellors and few deans and chairs make it into the index. I was particularly hard on 'distinguished graduates.' A graduate's name was introduced only if it was part of the story of the University. Finance Minister Paul Martin, for example, made it into the index because he said something relevant about the federal government's involvement with research chairs, but his father did not make it into the index. Professors who had not distinguished themselves in a special way or were not an integral part of the overall story of the University tended not to have been included.

Each chapter would look at a specific event or time period – often turning points in the University's history. A chapter would start on a particular date and look backwards at what led up to an issue or event, and then take the story forward in time, usually anticipating the next chapter. Although the whole book is chronological, the individual chapters are not. The first chapter, for example, starts with John Strachan leaving Upper Canada for England in 1826 to get the charter. It does not start with John Graves Simcoe's desire for a university in the 1790s. The chapter ends with Strachan reporting in the fall of 1828 that King's College was 'about to open its doors'. The second chapter starts with the procession to lay the corner-stone for King's College in 1842. It then looks back at what happened in the intervening 15 years and then goes forward in time. The chapter ends with Strachan stating that a 'godless college' would fail. The next chapter starts with a bill to establish the godless University of Toronto in 1849.

A similar approach is taken in subsequent chapters. Each chapter tries to lead to the next chapter. The structure of the opening and closing of the chapters was always on my mind, just as it had been in the murder books. Each chapter of the history has a specific date attached to it – the date of the first incident being described in the chapter. So, for example, the first chapter is dated 1826, when Strachan left York and the second chapter is dated 1842, when the cornerstone is laid for King's College. The technique also helps the reader to keep the time period in focus. After completing the book I learned that starting somewhere in the middle of a story is a well-known literary device – in medias res, used by Homer in the Iliad and the Odyssey.²³

The University wanted a one-volume history. I agreed with that decision. My contract with the U of T Press called for about 200,000 words of text and the equivalent of about 100 pages of pictures. A one-volume history made sense to me. If one were to go beyond one volume then why not five volumes or fifteen or, indeed, fifty volumes? Whatever the number of volumes, choices have to be made in what will be included. I also decided to bring the history close to the present – to the year 2000. As I state in the prologue, 'I wanted the story to have a happy ending.' Moreover, there was not an obvious earlier point to end the history. I knew all the presidents from Sidney Smith on. If I had to end the history at the point where I start to know the participants I would have to end it before World War I, where I mention F.C.A. Jeanneret as a participant in the pre-war COTC. Forty years later, I had extensive dealings with Jeanneret when he was the principal of University College and I was the president of the University College Literary and Athletic Society.

As many of you know, an earlier attempt was made to write the history of the University of Toronto. It was to have been a two-volume history. English professor Robin Harris was appointed University Historian in 1970 and spent the next 13 years either full-time or part-time on the task. In 1974, professor of history Gerald Craig was appointed to write the history up to the University of Toronto Act of 1906. Harris would cover the period 1906 to 1972. Each volume was to be separately published under the author's own name. I will leave it to others to study why the project was not successful. Illness clearly played a key role in Craig's inability to complete his part of the project.²⁴

Professor Harris deposited his papers in the archives in 1983 and in a background document accompanying the material he described the main problem he faced in writing the history. 'The problem I could not solve,' he stated, 'was the presentation of the material in human terms.'²⁵ He illustrated the issue by discussing Kathleen Russell, the director of the nursing program at the University, who had been appointed to the University in 1920. 'I contemplated,' Harris wrote, 'devoting perhaps three pages to Miss Russell, including a lengthy quotation from one of her annual reports as director....' 'The trouble is,' he went on, 'that between 1906 and 1972 the University of Toronto had between 100 and 200 Kathleen Russells. Two of them were Bernhard Fernow, the first dean of the Faculty of Forestry and William Pakenham, the dean of the Faculty of Education from 1907 to 1920 and of the Ontario College of Education from 1920 to 1934.... Since, in my opinion, the University of Toronto is the Kathleen Russells – and the Bernhard Fernows, the William Pakenhams, the Harold Innises, the John C. McLennans, the Northrop Fries – I have decided to call a halt.'

It was clear to me that I could not possibly write the history of each division of a university as complex as the University of Toronto. That is for each division to do, as many have done, encouraged by Harris. I discuss Russell, Fernow, and Pakenham in brief individual paragraphs where I set out the origins of their respective divisions. Of course, Innis, McLennan and Frye – as major university figures – get much more attention. The material that Harris collected and deposited in the archives was helpful to me. He had a great number of talented research assistants whose work made my task much easier than it otherwise would have been.

I also had the advantage of extensive secondary literature that had been published about the University of Toronto over the past 30 years. Brian McKillop's magisterial book, Matters of Mind: The University in Ontario, 1791-1951,²⁶ was particularly helpful, giving me an overview that allowed me to select at an early stage some of the key areas to explore. There were also several excellent books on University of Toronto presidents: Elizabeth Hulse's book on Daniel Wilson, James Greenlee's on Robert Falconer, and D.C. Master's on Henry Cody.²⁷ Plus, there were fine autobiographical writings, such as those by Claude Bissell, Ernest Sirluck, and Robert Blackburn.²⁸

Moreover, I had at least a dozen doctoral theses relating to the University of Toronto. Those presenting papers today are responsible for more than another dozen books and countless articles containing extensive discussions about aspects of the University of Toronto.

I also had the benefit of computers and the Internet. The use of e-mail allowed me to collect information easily. As we all know, people are more willing to respond by e-mail than by sending a letter. E-mail also allowed me to communicate easily with my research assistants, individually and collectively. Drafts were constantly being sent back and forth by attachments. It was not necessary to be in my office in the archives to keep in close touch with my research assistants. Moreover, having the drafts on the Internet was one more form of back-up. I also had the drafts on my home computer, my office computer at the law school, and two computers in the archives, as well as on floppies. As it turned out, we never lost any material and so I did not need such elaborate back-ups. But it allowed me to sleep better, which indirectly contributed to the completion of the project. One other advantage of the computer was that it was easy to do word counts that helped me to keep the length of chapters under control. Further, I always kept the date and the word count at the top of each draft of a chapter. This enabled us to keep track of the great quantity of material we were producing. Some of the chapters went through more than ten drafts.

The Internet had another great advantage. The notes could be placed on a website on the Internet, which meant that the manuscript could have detailed notes, without sacrificing space in the book itself. There are about 10,000 notes. We were, however, able to include in the book thirteen pages on the sources used for each chapter, and eighteen pages for a bibliography limited to those sources. The U of T Press developed and maintains the website.²⁹ I worked closely with the Press for months trying to get the most user-friendly format. We use Adobe's PDF format. You can click on individual chapters or the entire text. Another advantage of using the Internet is that one can do an electronic search of the footnotes. The notes are also available in a hard copy edition, with its own ISBN number for cataloguing purposes.³⁰

Still another advantage is that the notes can be changed. The notes are now current as of publication date, March 15, 2002, and will be updated from time to time to correct errors. Future changes will be clearly indicated in the notes, perhaps by using square brackets. The current version of the notes includes some material that would have gone into the text if it had been discovered in time. One such matter was a discovery that Charles Levi made a few months before publication of a memo from the registrar Robin Ross to Claude Bissell in 1959 making it clear that the faculty of medicine discriminated against Jews as late as 1959. Up until finding that note I felt I could not go further in the text than stating that 'it appears reasonably clear from both the anecdotal and the statistical evidence available that discriminatory practices prevailed for a period of time' after a discretionary admission policy was introduced in 1942.³¹

This is the first time that the U of T Press put all of the footnotes on the Internet. Connie Backhouse's book, Colour-Coded,³² had used the Internet for additional material for individual footnotes that could not be included in the book itself because of space concerns. Other publishers have been putting material on the Internet. Some have placed bibliographies and some have placed the whole book, including footnotes, on the web.³³

One problem was how to place the notes on the web, but not include footnote numbers in the text. Ron Schoeffel, the then editor-in-chief of the Press, suggested that we adopt the technique that he had been using for some of the volumes in the Press' Erasmus series, where they have translations of Erasmus' writings, without footnote numbers embedded in the text. The text is identified by page and line number and the particular passage being commented upon. In the history, we decided to use page, paragraph, and phrase or word.

My research assistants were uniformly excellent. I was helped in the formulation of the proposal in the summer of 1997 by my two summer research assistants, who had just finished first year law school: Graham Rawlinson, who had left history for the law and is now with the law firm Torys, and Katrina Wyman, who has just taken a tenure-stream position at NYU law school. After the project got underway, Charles Levi, who had just submitted his doctorate in history at York University under Paul Axelrod, became my principal research assistant. Charles was a fabulous researcher. If there was a document that needed to be found, Charles would find it. Michiel Horn described Charles in the acknowledgments to his book on academic freedom as 'incomparable.'³⁴ I agree.

I had intended to allocate my funds for research more or less equally over the life of the project. I had so many excellent applications to work on the project for the first summer that I changed course and hired six persons in addition to Charles to help me collect material. I won't name them all, but will note two of the researchers: Sara Burke, now teaching at Laurentian University, helped me collect material on women in the University, and Michael McCulloch, who has his doctorate in 19th century Canadian history and had just finished first year law, assisted me in understanding the history of the early years of the University.³⁵

We were also helped immensely by the staff of the U of T Archives, and particularly by Harold Averill. There is not a scholar who has worked on aspects of U of T's history who would not acknowledge how important Harold has been to his or her own project. Harold and others within and outside the University were generous with the time they spent commenting on drafts of chapters or on the entire manuscript. Bob Gidney and Wyn Millar, to give two heroic examples, read two versions of the manuscript and their perceptive comments were valuable in helping shape the final product.

Let me say something about how I went about the research. Many of the methods I used for this project were similar to those I used for my PhD thesis forty years earlier – even though there were then no personal computers, nor were there photocopiers, nor even sticky tabs. I suspect that the research techniques for one's doctorate stick with you for life. I still use a small Bambi stapler that I used for my thesis. I get a fresh supply of staples whenever I am in England. I ran out during the project and had a friend in England send me a new batch. And I wonder how closely one's research techniques match the research techniques of one's supervisor, just as I suspect one's writing style tries to mirror that of one's supervisor, as mine did. My supervisor was Glanville Williams of Cambridge, whose writing style I admired. When I first met with him I confessed to him that I had done very little writing as an undergraduate or at law school and was very unsure of that aspect of producing a thesis. To my surprise, he said that he had had the same fear when he started his thesis and decided to study the style of historian E.H Carr. I decided to study Glanville Williams' style. Whether my style still reflects his style, or, indirectly, E.H. Carr's, I am uncertain. In general, I try to follow the advice I recently saw on a bumper sticker: 'eschew obfuscation.'

For what it is worth, here is the way I went about the writing of the history. It may help persons who have not yet had to deal with masses of research material. I used the standard spiral binders to make notes of the material I was reading, just as I had in Cambridge. For my thesis the binders had to be cut up and distributed to appropriate file folders. For later projects, including the present book, I would make photocopies of the pages and distribute them to the files, so that I would have both the spiral binders and the material in the files. I never used cards, as I see many persons still do. With the spiral binders I never have to worry about mixing up the cards. I do not have advice on how to organize the files except to say that I have found in every project that I have done that I am constantly reorganizing the subject matter and the contents of the files. The accumulation of material inevitably causes one to reassess the organization of the material.

As with my thesis, I embedded the references in whatever text I was writing so that I would not have to search for the references later. The text with the embedded references would be sent by e-mail to one of my research assistants, usually Charles, who would change the embedded references into proper footnotes. Because of the extent of the material we had to keep track of and the need to find the material quickly, Charles and I developed a system whereby there was a large three-ringed binder for each chapter, containing photocopies of the precise pages we had cited, with the relevant parts circled. The material was put in the binder according to the source, such as the U of T Bulletin or a particular book or article. There are tables of contents for each binder which allowed us to find material easily. We rarely had to spend time tracking down a lost document. All of the 40 or so binders are being deposited in the archives along with other material on the project.

The use of our own photocopier in our own room in the archives was crucial for the project. Indeed, in the negotiations leading to the contract it was one of the few conditions I insisted upon. We could photocopy material when we needed it and, if necessary, it could be faxed to me at home, where I did the writing, from our office in the archives.

Since completing the history I have read some of the literature on writing history.³⁶ It was probably an advantage not to have read it before the book was finished. I could ³⁶ See, for example, Peter Burke, ed., New Perspectives on Historical Writing, 2nd ed., (University Park: Pennsylvania State University Press, 2001); Carl Berger, The Writing of Canadian History: Aspects of English-Canadian Historical Writing: 1900 – 1970 (Toronto: Oxford University Press, 1976); Berger, Contemporary Approaches to Canadian History (Toronto: Copp Clark Pitman, 1987); E. naively continue to do what I had been doing before. As I read the material, I kept wondering how the U of T history fit into the various theories. The manuscript certainly fits into a narrative style.³⁷ It attempts to place the history in the context of the times by looking at relevant social, political and economic conditions. Is it top down or bottom up?³⁸ I guess it is both, but mainly top down. It is hard for an institutional history to avoid discussing presidents and other senior administrators. But I did not divide the chapters according to presidents. The selection of a new president was usually dealt with in the middle of a chapter.

I tried to include detailed descriptions of events from the students' perspectives, such as the chapter on the admission of women and the student strike of 1895. It is not, however, a history of students or of women. Charles Levi and Sara Burke, respectively, can still write their own books on those subjects without worry that the field has been covered.

In some places I go into great detail to describe an event. Some of these may be the U of T equivalents of the Balinese cockfights described by Clifford Geertz.³⁹ In addition to the fight over the admission of women and the student strike, there is the detailed discussion of the contest over whether Cody or Massey would be the chancellor, and the struggle between the administration and the faculty association over the memorandum of agreement.

Finally, let me say something about the difference between a lawyer's interpretation of evidence and an historian's approach. In my view, there should not be a difference. Lawyers and judges tend to draw inferences from the evidence the same as historians. The same considerations of memory, potential bias, and other factors should influence historians and lawyers equally. There are differences, however, concerning the admissibility of evidence. For policy reasons, certain relevant evidence is excluded from the trier of fact as a matter of law. Solicitor-client privilege, which is necessary in order to permit persons to communicate freely with their lawyers, is one example. The exclusion of character evidence, which is designed to protect the accused from a jury saying: 'we don't care whether he is guilty or innocent, he should be behind bars', is another. And, of course, historically, hearsay evidence tended to be excluded, although the hearsay rules have been changing in recent years. The law also differs from the historian's approach by setting out standards of proof, such as proof beyond a reasonable doubt in a criminal case and proof on a balance of probabilities in a civil case. But on the basic question of whether an inference should be drawn from the evidence available, I do not see that there should be any difference.

I am grateful to have been given the opportunity to write the history of one of Canada's most important institutions. I learned a great amount about many fascinating aspects of Canada's social, political, economic, cultural, and intellectual history. I am also grateful to the organizers of this symposium for inviting me to think about the process I followed in writing the history of the University of Toronto.

Scope and content

Records [textual, graphic, moving images], 3.29 m (23 boxes)

Personal records of Martin L. Friedland, Professor and former Dean of Law, consisting of personal and professional correspondence, certificates, memoranda, notes, briefs, reports, and drafts of publications relating to his administrative and other activities in the Faculty of Law and other divisions at the University of Toronto, various legal organizations, his work as a consultant, and his writings.

The publications documented in depth are a comparison of jury selection in Canada and the United States, judicial independence in Canada, and the eighth edition of his casebook on criminal law. Dr. Friedland's work as a consultant includes studies for the federal Somalia enquiry, the Criminal Justice Review Committee and the Office of the Attorney General of Ontario, and projects for other provincial and territorial governments. Other files document his activities as a member of the Board and Manuscript Review Committee of the University of Toronto Press, and a number of other organizations including the Canada-China Senior Judges Training program, the Osgoode Society, the Royal Society of Canada. Included are photographs and a video.

Introductory remarks by Martin L. Friedland

In 1998 I deposited a large collection of personal records [B1998-0006 (1868-1997, 30.03 metres)] in the University of Toronto Archives. The present accession covers, for the most part, material acquired since then. There are, however, some documents from earlier periods that for one reason or another did not find their way into the earlier accession. These include, for example, such items as hand-written drafts of the study I did on military justice for the Somalia Inquiry published in 1996, an invitation to the Queen's Garden Party when I was in England in 1969, my federal Queen's Counsel order-in-council from 1975, and a touching letter from Lord Denning, former Master of the Rolls, when he was 95 year's old in 1996. They also include many family letters written from England, Israel, and other places to my mother and to my wife's father, both of whom died since the earlier deposit of my papers, and I acquired the correspondence.

At about the time that I deposited the earlier material I was selected to write the history of the University of Toronto. That undertaking occupied most of my time over the following 5 years (1997-2002). The papers relating to the history of the University of Toronto are contained in a separate accession (B2002-0022). A description of the writing of the history is contained in an appendix to that accession.

The material in the present collection includes follow-up correspondence, documents, and lectures on various projects that were published before the earlier accession was deposited. I gave, for example, several talks on judicial independence and accountability – one to a conference organized by the Society for the Reform of the Criminal Law in Whistler, BC in 1996 and another to a conference in Vancouver in 2001 on the 300th anniversary of the Act of Settlement (See Series 5). In October 2000 I went to Beijing for 10 days to work with Chinese judges on issues relating to judicial independence. One of the consequences of that visit was that my report, A Place Apart: Judicial Independence and Accountability in Canada, prepared for the Canadian Judicial Council, is being translated into Chinese with a preface by Audrey McLachlin, the chief justice of Canada. The translation has been completed (see the file in Series 7), although I have not yet seen the finished book.

In 1996 the deputy attorney general of Ontario, Larry Taman, invited me to act as a general consultant to the attorney general's department on a range of policy issues that were being debated in the department. These included issues relating to a possible court services agency and questions concerning devolution of a number of criminal justice matters to other bodies, including devolution of responsibility for the Provincial Offences Act to municipalities. (See Series 6.) My task was to try to ensure that the public interest was properly taken into account in whatever was done. I was also involved in a number of Attorney General's roundtable discussions relating to the follow-up of the Morin Inquiry, including issues on jail-house confessions and the forensic laboratories. In 1998 I was asked to help organize and draft the report for a committee that was looking at the workings of the criminal justice system in Ontario. The Report of the Criminal Justice Review Committee was published in 1999.

These records are divided into eight series, which are listed in the table of contents.

Series 1: Personal and family

1925-2002

Records [textual, graphic], 0.28 m

This series consists of files documenting Professor Friedland's personal and family activities. It begins with a number of files documenting Friedland's activities as a student and professor of law at the University of Toronto, his post-retirement professional and other activities. There follow files relating to members of his family, arranged by name, which focus broadly on family affairs and more specifically on personal lives, including professional and social activities, achievements, births, weddings and deaths. These are followed by other files containing correspondence sent home from England, Europe and Israel, and relating to the Friedland residences on Hillsdale Avenue and Belsize Drive.

The files contain correspondence, certificates, curriculum vitae, greeting cards, honours, notes, notices, legal documents such as passports and wills, medical reports, programmes, postcards, photographs, and press clippings (including obituaries).

Series 2: Honours

1976-2001

Records [textual, graphic], 0.07 m

The files in this series contain correspondence, addresses, certificates, programmes, and a photoprint relating to honours bestowed in Professor Friedland.

The honours described herein are: Queen's Council (Canada), 1976; James Marshall Tory Dean's Chair, Faculty of Law, University of Toronto, 1996; an LL.D degree from Cambridge University (2000); and an honorary degree from the University of Toronto (2001).

Arrangement:

The certificate [B2002-0023/002(15)] announcing Dr. Friedland's appointment as a Queen's Counsel is oversized and is filed separately.

A black-and-white photoprint of Dr. Friedland has been removed from B2002-0023/002(18) to box B2002-0023/001P(10).

Series 3: Correspondence

1925-2002 [predominant 1994-2002]

Records [textual, graphic], 0.52 m

The correspondence files in this series are arranged alphabetically by author. They document Professor Friedland's activities as a friend, as a student advisor and thesis supervisor, as a colleague assisting in honours bestowed on his peers, as an author, and as an authority on legal matters. They also document the increased leisure that came with official retirement.

The correspondence touches on many aspects of Dr. Friedland's life, both personal and professional. It reveals his enormous network of contacts in legal and academic circles ranging from Lord Denning down to lowly law students. The letters cover a wide range of topics and issues, including some very topical ones such as international terrorism. Dr. Friedland received numerous requests for references from students and colleagues and, because he sat on the manuscript review committee of the University of Toronto Press, he was also asked to evaluate many manuscripts.

Some of the files contain commentary on legal issues on which Dr. Friedland was working. They may also hold drafts of articles forwarded by colleagues for commentary or presented a complementary copies [published copies have been removed, though the appropriate references have been retained], letters of congratulation and of reference. There is also correspondence regarding and programmes of conferences, and correspondence re and programmes for installation ceremonies. There are numerous invitations to dinners and other events and tributes on the deaths of friends and colleagues and notes on any of the above. Also present are greeting cards and several photoprints.

Series 4: Faculty of Law activities

1958-2002

Records [textual, moving images], 0.25 m

This series is divided into two sub-series, 'Activities' and 'Correspondence with students'. The first sub-series contains correspondence, memoranda, notes, reports, and lecture material documenting Professor Friedland's activities within the faculty and the faculty's affairs generally. The 'course' files contain Professor Friedland's outlines, notes, assignments and examinations for his course in criminal law. There are also files on the publications, Faculty of Law Review and Nexus. The remaining files in this sub-series relate primarily to Professor Friedland's activities with the 'Class of 5T8's fortieth anniversary reunion in 1998 and to the Faculty's fiftieth anniversary celebrations in 1999-2000. This sub-series ends with files on Professor Friedland's 1997 report on the grading practices policy at the Faculty and on the Faculty's marks scandal in 2001.

The records in this sub-series contain correspondence, memoranda and notes and reports; class outlines, assignments and other material; minutes of meetings for anniversary celebrations, along with programmes and publications (including drafts), sheet music and songs, and a video, notices, press releases and press clippings.

The second sub-series, 'Correspondence with students', contains correspondence, memoranda, curriculum vitae (but not student transcripts and marks, which have been removed), greeting cards, postcards and the occasional offprint relating primarily to references requested from Professor Friedland, and a file of memorabilia.

Most of the reference requests relate to applications for graduate school, academic appointments, and positions in legal firms and for clerkships in the Supreme Court of Canada and other courts. Others relate to academic honours – awards, prizes and scholarships. Some of the files also contain correspondence relating to courses taken and theses supervised, though most of this type of correspondence is located in 'Series III.: Correspondence' above. Some of the requests are more prosaic, such as asking Professor Friedland to sign passport applications and photos. Also included are memos from Professor Friedland to officials in the Faculty of Law, such as the summer student co-ordinator, about specific students. In their letters, these students and former students provide information about their current activities which sometimes have taken them far afield, examples being the Rwanda genocide case, the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, and legal work in Japan.

The file arrangement in this sub-series is alphabetical by name of the student.

Series 5: Research and publications

1968-2002

Records [textual], 0.6 m

This series contains material relating to a number of Professor Friedland's publications. For four of his books – Double jeopardy, The trials of Israel Lipski, The case of Valentine Shortis, and The death of Old Man Rice – the files contain only a small amount of correspondence, press clippings, and promotional material. The manuscripts for these books, along with the supporting correspondence and related material, are located in Friedland's earlier accession, B1998-0006.

The series concentrates on three of Friedland's publications, each of which generated a number of spin-off articles and much commentary. The files for these titles complement the more complete record of activities contained in B1998-0006. Controlling misconduct in the military, his 1997 study for the federal Commission of enquiry into the deployment of Canadian Forces in Somalia, attracted much attention. So did 'Borderline justice', his 1992-1996 study with Kent Roach comparing jury selection in the two Niagaras, one Canadian and the other American. Friedland delivered papers on their findings at conferences and articles appeared in several journals and in a festschrift. The third publication, A place apart: Judicial independence and accountability in Canada (1995), continued the spirited public debate over the issue, one that is still going on and which is documented here in conferences, seminars, reports, and even a video, along with supporting correspondence and notes. A file on the Chinese translation of this volume is located in 'Series VII: Other activities'. There are also drafts of papers on topics such as legal aid and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, along with drafts of the manuscript for the eighth edition (1997) of his book (co-authored by Kent Roach), Cases and materials on criminal law and procedures.

The file arrangement is chronological, by date of manuscript or date of publication.

Series 6: Government-commissioned and other research

1994-2001

Records [textual], 0.75 m

The principal elements in this series consist of the files Dr. Friedland assembled while a consultant to the Ontario Justice Review Committee and as a general consultant to the Office of the Attorney General for Ontario. The series ends with a small number of files on other activities, ranging from contract work for the government of the North West Territories to providing advice on the Hepatitis C class action lawsuit in Ontario.

As Dr. Friedland notes in his introduction, he was asked in 1998 to “help organize and draft the report for a committee [the Criminal Justice Review Committee] that was looking at the working of the criminal justice system in Ontario.” Its report was published in 1999. Most of the files relating to the Committee’s work, as might be expected, remain with the government of Ontario but there are still a substantial number in this series. Dr. Friedland’s correspondence and the briefs, memoranda and reports, often heavily annotated by him, along with his notes and the drafts of the Committee’s report, clearly demonstrate the role that he played in the process.

The consulting contracts Dr. Friedland signed with the Office of the Attorney General, beginning in 1996, enabled him to participate in the review of a “range of policy issues that were being debated in the department. These included issues relating to a possible court services agency and questions concerning devolution of a number of criminal justice matters to other bodies, including devolution of responsibility for the Provincial Offences Act to municipalities.” In addition, Dr. Friedland’s involvement in departmental roundtable discussions and the Crown Policy Manual Review Committee, provides insights into the high-profile legal cases of Guy Paul Morin and Paul Bernardo, and issues arising therefrom, including “jail-house confessions and the forensic laboratories". Again, extensive notes and annotation complement the correspondence, memoranda, background and briefing notes, and reports found in the files.

Series 7: Other activities

1995-2002

Records [textual], 0.68 m

The records in this series document some of Dr. Friedland's professional activities, mostly outside the Faculty of Law (he retired in 1998 but still teaches). The first three boxes focus on his relationship with the University of Toronto Press where he served on its Board of Directors and has sat on its Manuscripts Review Committee for over twenty years, including being chair since 1995. Nearly all of the files relate to the Committee, and contain extensive correspondence with other committee members and the executive of the Press, including commentary on policy decisions, including manuscripts being considered for publication.

Dr. Friedland has also sat on the board of directors of the Osgoode Society, which promotes the writing of legal history. The five files relating to this society consist principally of memoranda, minutes and supporting documentation and there are few annotations and notes. The original material consists primarily of Dr. Friedland's 1999 oral history interview conducted as a part of the Society's Chief Justice Bora Laskin Project and his file on the Society's twentieth anniversary symposium in June 1999, "History goes to Court", where he chaired the panel on 'Other leading cases'.

Dr. Friedland was elected a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1983 (the files relating to his activities prior to 1997 are located in accession B1998-0006). In 1997 and 1999 he chaired the Innis-Gérin Medal selection committee. In 1997 he became a member of the nominating committee of Academy II (Humanities and Social Sciences) of the Royal Society of Canada and in 1998 was elected to the Council of Academy II for a three-year term. These activities, and his involvement in the 1999 RSC symposium in Edmonton, are documented here.

In October 2000 Dr. Friedland went to Beijing for ten days to discuss with Chinese judges issues relating to judicial independence. This project consisted of a series of seminars in Canada-China's Senior Judges Training program sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency and held at the National Judges College of China. Three different seminars were held – one on 'judicial ethics' in October (in which Dr. Friedland participated) and two in November on 'judicial review' and 'case management'. The correspondence, notes, and reports relating to the project are contained in these files, along with drafts, in Chinese, of the published version of Dr. Friedland's study on judicial independence, A place apart.

The remaining files in the series document a number Dr. Friedland's other activities between 1995 and 2002. Included are a few addresses, some of his travels, and his membership in or association with a number of professional organizations such as the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and the Law Commission of Canada. Dr. Friedland was appointed an officer of the Order of Canada in 1990 and awarded the Canada Council's Molson Prize for 'outstanding achievements and exceptional contribution to the enrichment of the cultural life of Canada' in 1995. The files on the Molson Seminar and the Order of Canada reflect his ongoing responsibilities as a recipient of these awards. The last of the files document his continuing involvement in activities and issues at the University of Toronto, ranging from the Centre for International Studies' program on conflict management to the Sports Hall of Fame selection committee.

Series 8: Photographs

Records [graphic], 0.07 m

The photographs in this series document the personal and professional life of Professor Friedland. The series begins with eleven files of photographs relating to Professor Friedland and his family, including formal portraits of himself, and informal images of his parents, his wife and children, and other relatives. Other images document events at the Faculty of Law, including informal parties and reunions; honours (including awards and honorary degrees) bestowed upon Friedland and his colleagues in law and university administration; and photographs relating to some of his research projects, including the University of Toronto history project.

Biographical note

Martin Lawrence Friedland was born in Toronto in 1932. He was educated at the University of Toronto, first in commerce and finance (BCom 1955). He was a member of the Commerce Club, the Hart House Music Committee and Hillel, was successively 3rd year president and president of the University College Literary and Athletic Society, and a champion debater. He also played squash and water polo and was a member of the 1954 champion senior intercollegiate water polo team. He then studied law (LLB 1958), where he was the gold medalist in his graduating year. He took his graduate training at Cambridge University, from which he received his PhD in 1967.

Professor Friedland's career has embraced several areas where he has utilized his knowledge of commerce and finance as well as of law. He has been a university professor and administrator, a shaper of public policy in Canada through his involvement with provincial and federal commissions, committees and task forces, and is an author of international standing.

Professor Friedland was called to the Ontario Bar in 1960. His contribution to the formation of public policy in Canada began with his earliest research, a study of gambling in Ontario (1961). Over the next few years his work as a legal associate, consultant, and committee member helped shape the Ontario Securities Act (1965), the Ontario Legal Aid Act (1966), the Ontario Regional Detention Centres Act (1967) and the Ontario Provincial Courts Act (1968). As a member of the Federal Task Force on the Canadian Corporations Act (1967-1968), Professor Friedland contributed to the Canadian Business Corporations Act that was finally passed in 1974.

In 1971 he was appointed a full-time commissioner of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, serving only one year before returning to Toronto as Dean of the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. His study on access to the law was published in 1975 and he continued to do work for the Commission into the 1980s, especially on national security and criminal codification. In the 1990s he contributed to the discussion on the formation of a new Law Commission.

In 1975 Professor Friedland served as a consultant to the Solicitor General of Canada's Task Force on Gun Control and authored a background study on the subject. He has retained his interest and involvement in the issue as it unfolded in the 1990s and beyond. Appointed in 1977 to hear cases under the Ontario Human Rights Act, he sat on a number of boards of inquiry until 1995, when his contract was not renewed. From 1978 to 1980 he was a consultant to the McDonald Commission during its enquiry into the activities of the RCMP and national security, for which he prepared another background study. The result was the Canadian Security and Intelligence Act of 1984.

In the 1980s he served as a consultant to the Canadian Sentencing Commission and to the Law Reform Commission of Canada. The principal issues he addressed were the sentencing structure, a review of the Criminal Code, and offences against public order. In 1987-1988 he chaired the Ontario Task Force on the controversial issues of inflation protection for employment pension plans. Though legislation was introduced, the report was not, in the end, implemented. In 1989 he took part in the Royal Society of Canada's study on tobacco, nicotine and addiction and began serving part-time on the Ontario Securities Commission (until 1991).

In 1992 the Canadian Judicial Council commissioned Professor Friedland to undertake a study of judicial independence and accountability in Canada; the report was issued in 1995. He also served as a consultant to the Commission of Inquiry into the Deployment of Canadian Forces in Somalia (1995-1997). Beginning in 1996, a series of contracts with the office of Attorney General of Ontario enabled him to participate in the review of a "range of policy issues that were being debated in the department. These included issues relating to a possible court services agency and questions concerning the devolution of a number of criminal justice matters to other bodies, including devolution of responsibility for the Provincial Offences Act to municipalities." In addition, his involvement in departmental roundtable discussions and the Crown Policy Manual Review Committee provided insights into the high-profile legal cases of Guy Paul Morin and Paul Bernardo, and issues arising there from, including "jail-house confessions and forensic laboratories". In July 1997, at the request of the Ontario Legal Aid Review Committee, he submitted a study on the governance of the Ontario Legal Aid Plan, and in 1998 he served as a consultant to the Ontario Criminal Justice Review.

Since 2001 and the emphasis on security, Professor Friedland's experiences from his work with the McDonald Commission has led to participation in a number of workshops and conferences relating to terrorism. The federal Department of Justice asked him to examine and prepare a critical analysis of the government's proposed anti-terrorism legislation. In 2005 he served as a consultant on the policy aspects of the mandate of the Commission of Inquiry into the Actions of Canadian Officials in Relation to Maher Arar. In 2009 he was appointed a member of the Legal Aid Ontario Advisory Committee on Criminal Justice.

While carrying out these public duties, Professor Friedland established an impressive record as an academic. His career began at the Osgoode Hall Law School in 1961 but in 1965 he returned to his alma mater as an associate professor in the Faculty of Law. He was promoted to full professor in 1968 and dean in 1972, a position he held for seven years. During his sabbatical in 1979-1980 he was Visiting Professor successively at the faculties of law in the Hebrew University and Tel Aviv University, and at the Institute of Criminology at Clare Hall, Cambridge University. In 1984 he was cross-appointed to the Centre of Criminology and made a University Professor in 1985. He was a fellow of the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and from 1986 to 1989 was director of its Law and Society Program. He served as acting dean of the Faculty of Law in 1995 and retired in 1998.

Professor Friedland has played a very active role in university governance. He was elected a member of the President's Council in 1969, the same year that he began chairing the Commission on University Government Programming Committee. This committee reviewed the University of Toronto's governing structure; the result was the replacement of the bicameral system (Board of Governors and Senate) with the unicameral Governing Council. In the 1960s and the 1970s he served on other committees, including the Human Experimentation Committee (1965-1970), the Presidential Tenure Review hearings (chair, 1973-1975), the Governing Council (1974-1976) and the Research Board (1973-1976). From 1978 to 2008 he was a member (chair from 1995) of the manuscript review committee of the University of Toronto Press and from 1992 to 2007 a member of its Board of Directors.

In the 1980s Professor Friedland was a member of the Academic Affairs Committee of the Governing Council (1982-1983), of the Board of Directors of the University Settlement House (1982-1988), and chair of the Provost's Committee on the Department of Architecture (1984). He has been a senior fellow of Massey College since 1985 and in 1991 served on the Presidential Commission on Conflicts of Interest. In 1995 he served as Acting Dean of the Faculty of Law. Currently (since 2007) he has chaired the University's Grievance Review Panel.

Professor Friedland has been much sought after as a public speaker and is a prolific author. "Many of his writings have been cited and relied upon in legal research and judicial decisions throughout the common law world." He has published over fifty articles and chapters in books, beginning with several, while still an undergraduate, in the University of Toronto Faculty of Law Review. These reflect his interest in such subjects as law reform, legal history, access to the law, gun control, and judicial independence. He has also published eighteen books.

His first book, Detention Before Trial, a study of the bail system in Canada, appeared in 1965. It marked the first time a professor of law in Canada had gathered empirical evidence on the workings of the justice system and it led directly to the Bail Reform Act of 1971.

Professor Friedland's second book, Double Jeopardy (1969), was based on his doctoral thesis. Courts and Trials (1975), an interdisciplinary series of lectures given in 1972-1973, was designed to show the link between professionalism and the academic study of law. Access to the Law (also 1975), prepared for the Law Reform Commission of Canada, was written as a first step in making the law accessible to non-lawyers. His interest in law reform also resulted in A Century of Criminal Justice: Perspectives on the Development of Canadian Law (1984), which ranged beyond law reform to include various issues on criminal justice. National Security: The Legal Dimensions (also 1984) arose from his involvement with the McDonald Commission.

A Canadian Institute for Advanced Research project that began in 1985 produced three studies. Sanctions and Rewards in the Legal System resulted from papers given at a 1986 symposium. The specific issues, ranging from tax compliance to family violence and prostitution, from the second stage of the project were written up as Regulating Traffic Safety (with Professor Friedland as a co-author) and Securing Compliance: Seven Case Studies, both of which appeared in 1990.

Professor Friedland's casebook, Cases and materials on criminal law and procedure, first appeared in September 1967. Between then and 2004 University of Toronto Press and Emond Montgomery have put out nine editions. Another volume emanating from the University of Toronto was Rough Justice: Essays on Crime in Literature. It began as a seminar organized with the Department of English in 1986. The material was polished in later seminars and the book appeared in 1991.

Professor Friedland has also written three true crime books. The Trials of Israel Lipski (1984), about a Polish Jew hanged for murder in London in 1887, won the Crime Writers of Canada Award for Non-fiction and piqued the interest of filmmakers. An early twentieth century Canadian trial is featured in The Case of Valentine Shortis (1986). It, too, had film potential, but the untimely death of the National Film Board's proposed director derailed the project. The Death of Old Man Rice (1994), about the 1902 trial for the murder of the founder of Rice University, added an American component to Professor Friedland's crime stories; it also aroused considerable interest. One of his current projects is researching a fourth murder mystery, based in India.

His two latest books on legal issues are A Place Apart: Judicial Independence and Accountability in Canada (1995), prepared for the Canadian Judicial Council, and Controlling Misconduct in the Military (1997), a study commissioned by the Somalia Inquiry. The former led to Professor Friedland going to Beijing in 2000 to give a seminar on judicial ethics as a part of the Canada-China Senior Judges training program, and parts of the book have been translated into Chinese. Professor Friedland's most recent major writing project has been The University of Toronto: A History, the first university history in seventy-five years, which appeared in 2002 and which was awarded three prizes, the Toronto Heritage Award, the Floyd S Chalmers Award, and the J.J. Talman Award. More recently he has worked on a project, tentatively titled Criminal Justice in Canada Revisited, which ended up as his memoirs, My Life in Crime and Other Academic Adventures (2007). One of the many spin-offs from his writing the history of the University of Toronto is his introductory essay to Larry Richards' The University of Toronto: an Architectural Tour (2009).

In recognition of his many services to his profession and his country, Professor Friedland has been the recipient of numerous honours. He was appointed federal Queen's Council in 1975 and elected a fellow of the Royal Society of Canada in 1983. In 1985 he received the Canadian Association of Law Teachers and Law Reform Commission of Canada Award for an "outstanding contribution to legal research and law reform." In 1987 he received the Alumni Faculty Award from the University of Toronto. Two honours followed in 1990, Officer of the Order of Canada and the David W. Mundell Medal for "distinguished contributions to Letters and Law." Two more followed in 1994, the Canadian Bar Association's Raymond John Hnatyshyn Award for an "outstanding contribution to the law and legal scholarship in Canada," and the Criminal Law Association's G. Arthur Martin Criminal Justice Award. In 1995 he received the Canadian Council's Molson Award in the Humanities and Social Sciences for "outstanding achievements and exceptional contribution to the enrichment of the cultural life of Canada." In 1996, in recognition of his academic and administrative achievements, he was named the first James Marshall Tory Dean's Chair in the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. He received an LLD from Cambridge University in 1997, and LLDs (honorary) from the University of Toronto in 2001 and York University in 2003. Also in 2003, he was the recipient of the Royal Society of Canada's Sir John William Dawson Medal. In 2004 he was inducted as a Companion of the Order of Canada. In 2009 he received a Bachelor of Applied Arts (honorary) from Humber College.

When Professor Friedland was awarded the 1995 Molson Prize, the presenter of the award, Lynn Penrod, said in part:

"The Prize I am honoured to present today celebrates the achievements of a man regarded throughout the common law world as Canada's leading scholar in criminal law. Dr. Martin Friedland has blazed a trail of outstanding contributions in an esteemed career spanning three decades. His service and leadership on a variety of reform initiatives involving such issues as bail law, securities regulation, corporate law, criminal law, criminal law and procedure, the administration of justice, pension rights, gun control, national security and intelligence, reflect a remarkable set of contributions as a lawyer, teacher, researcher and citizen.

The special features which distinguish Dr. Friedland from many other renowned jurists are the international quality of much of his work, the rich broad and varied range of his scholarship, and in many cases its direct impact on policy and the law in practice. Much of what he has published is not located in a particular jurisdiction, but surveys the entire common law world and also introduces comparative elements. Many of his writings have been cited and relied upon in legal research and judicial decisions throughout the common law world.

The other striking characteristic of his work is its multifaceted nature. Some of it is rigorous, traditional, doctrinal law. Other parts are contextual and policy-oriented. Some is historical and literary in nature, or takes an interdisciplinary approach to the subject matter..."

Professor Friedland lives in Toronto. His wife, Judith, Professor Emeritus, Occupational Therapy, University of Toronto, has written a history of occupational therapy in Canada.

Introductory Remarks by Martin Friedland

B2008-0033

In 1998 I deposited a large collection of personal records [B1998-0006 (1868-1997), 30.03 metres]] in the University of Toronto Archives. Further deposits were made in 2002. One of these [B2002-0022 (1887-2002, predominant 1928-2002), 13.5 metres]] consisted of papers relating to writing the history of the University of Toronto, The University of Toronto: A History, published by the University of Toronto Press in 2002. A second deposit [B2002-0023 (1925-2002), 3.29 metres] related to my personal papers from the years 1998 to 2002, plus some documents from earlier years.

The present deposit contains personal papers from 2002 to 2008, including some documents from earlier years, as well as further documents relating to the history of the University of Toronto.

My major research endeavour over the past six years was the research and writing of my memoirs, My Life in Crime and Other Academic Adventures, which was published by the Osgoode Society for Legal History and the University of Toronto Press in 1997. It combined a personal memoir with an historical and analytical investigation of a number of areas of law and public policy with which I have been engaged over the past 50 years. The task was difficult because it brought these areas of law up-to date and thus required keeping up with current developments in the law in a large number of fields, such as bail, legal aid, securities regulation, law reform, national security, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, judicial independence, and military justice.

The project had been in my mind for some time, but the catalyst for undertaking it was the John Edwards Memorial Lecture, 'Criminal Justice Revisited,' delivered at the University of Toronto in 2003, later published in the Criminal Law Quarterly. The subject areas also formed the basis of a seminar that I conducted for four years at Woodsworth College entitled 'Issues in Criminal Justice' and later an 'intensive course' that I gave for two years at the Law School.

Over the past six years I continued to be involved with follow-up matters relating to the history of the University of Toronto. Some of the talks to alumni groups and others, such as those given out west and in Montreal and New York, were given after the 2002 deposit of papers and are included in this deposit. Similarly, included in this deposit are documents on certain other events, such as the Cassels Brock dinner and the University Professors' Global Knowledge talk, as well as various media interviews and questions and comments from persons interested in the University of Toronto. Some earlier documents relating to the contract and other matters are also included. Three prizes for the book were awarded since 2002: Toronto Heritage Award, Floyd S Chalmers Award, and J.J. Talman Award.

The University of Toronto history led to my involvement in writing a lengthy introduction to a book for the Princeton Architectural Press by former dean of architecture Larry Richards on the architecture of the University of Toronto. The book, which will be published in the spring of 2009, is the first book in their series on a university outside the United States. I also participated in conferences and publications relating to Bora Laskin and Frank Iacobucci.

A further major involvement over the past six years relates to terrorism and the consequences of 9/11. Because of my earlier involvement in national security issues through my work with the McDonald Commission on the RCMP in the early 1980s, I participated in a number of workshops and conferences relating to terrorism. I was also asked by the department of justice to examine and prepare a critical analysis of the government's proposed anti-terrorism legislation. I also participated as a consultant on the policy aspects of the mandate of the Arar Commission.

There were also further follow-up conferences and writings on matters involving the judiciary, such as a talk and a publication on the concept of a unified criminal court and participation in several conferences on judicial appointments. In addition, there are files in the deposit relating to other earlier projects such as Detention Before Trial and Double Jeopardy. My book, The Trials of Israel Lipski (1994), led to the writing of an entry on Lipski for the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography.

One project that was explored at length, but did not proceed was on 'Access to the Law', which was a follow-up on my 1975 book with the same title. I tried to get the government of Ontario interested in funding a major internet project designed to make the law more accessible. With a grant from the Law Foundation of Ontario, models were prepared in a number of areas of law, but the project was eventually abandoned because the Ontario government was not interested in supporting it at the time.

The deposit also contains material on three honours received in 2003: an honorary degree from York University, the Royal Society of Canada's John William Dawson Medal, and promotion from Officer to Companion of the Order of Canada.

I maintain my office at the law school and have participated in a number of law school activities. I also continued my involvement as a director and chair of the governance committee of the Mutual Fund Dealers Association, which was not included in earlier deposits. In addition, I prepared a report for Access Copyright on the distribution of royalties and chaired several degree assessment committees for the Ontario government: one on a paralegal program for Humber College: and another on policing for Georgian College. For the past two years I have chaired the Grievance Review Panel of the University, but have not deposited any documents relating to that panel at this time.

As in the past, I have been heavily involved with the University of Toronto Press, as chair of the Manuscript Committee and as a member of the board of directors. The latter responsibility ended on June 30, 2008 and the former ended in November 2007. The past few years were important ones for the U of T Press, with a new president and vice-president for scholarly publishing, the sale of the printing division, and the acquisition of Broadview Press. I also continued as a member of the Osgoode Society board of directors, which was also a significant transitional period with the death of Peter Oliver and his replacement by Jim Phillips.

The deposit also contains some material on my family and travels, and much correspondence with many individuals.

B2014-0029

This is the fourth deposit of my papers in the University of Toronto Archives. The first was a collection of personal records in 1998 [B1998-006 (1968-1997) 30.03 metres]]. Further deposits were made in 2002. One of these [B2002-0022 (1887-2002, predominant 1928-2002), 13.5 metres]] consisted of papers relating to writing the history of the University of Toronto, The University of Toronto: A History, published by the University of Toronto Press in 2002. A second deposit [B2002-0023 (1925-2002), 3.29 metres] related to my personal papers from the years 1998 to 2002, plus some documents from earlier years. A deposit in 2008 [B2008-0033 ([189-?]-2008, bulk 1999-2008), 3.65 metres] contained personal papers from 2002 to 2008, including some documents from earlier years, as well as further documents relating to the history of the University of Toronto.

The present deposit consists primarily of personal papers from 2008 to the present. Many of the documents relate to the preparation of a 40 page introduction to the second edition of The University of Toronto: A History, published in hardcover and paperback in 2013.

I maintain my office at the law school and participate in a number of activities, including some decanal advisory committees. For the past few years I have taught an intensive course on "Issues in Criminal Justice" to upper year law students.

I continue to publish in a number of fields that I have worked on in the past, such as bail reform, judicial independence, evidence, and codification of the criminal law. A recent project, "Searching for Truth in the Criminal Justice System," published in the Criminal Law Quarterly, resulted in the exploration of a new area of research. The paper dealt with proof of facts. Future research will deal with proof of propositions of law. The research for the introduction to the publication of a new edition of W.P.M. Kennedy's 1922 classic, The Constitution of Canada, was particularly absorbing. Kennedy was an enigmatic figure, who became the first dean of the U of T law school even though he had never studied law. If more material is discovered, I may consider writing a full biography.

As the deposit shows, I have continued my involvement with the securities industry as a member of the board of the Mutual Fund Dealers Association and later acting as the chair of disciplinary hearings for a number of regulatory agencies. For a few years I was the chair of the Grievance Review Panel at the U of T. I also participated in a review of the McGill faculty of law and a legal studies program at Capilano University. There is also material on the report I did for Access Copyright, consultation for the Quadrennial Judicial Compensation Commission, membership in the Osgoode Society, and membership in the criminal law advisory committee of Legal Aid Ontario. As before, there are a number of files on my family and travel and a large number of files containing correspondence. A number of honours are documented, including an honorary degree from Humber College in 2009, an Alumni of Influence award from University College in 2012, and an honorary degree from the Law Society of Upper Canada in 2014.

This accession contains material created since the last accession in 2014, plus some earlier documents that had not yet been sent to the U of T Archives. A number of the projects that I had worked on in the past continue to generate interest. This is particularly true of my study of bail in 1965 and my book on the history of the University of Toronto, first published in 2002.

I continue to occupy an office at the law school, but have moved from my office in Flavelle House to a faculty office on the third floor of the new Jackman Building. I am no longer teaching a course, but give the occasional lecture and am involved to some extent in the life of the law school.

In terms of research, I started a project in 2014 entitled 'Searching for Truth in the Criminal Justice System' and published two articles in that area in the Criminal Law Quarterly. I put that project on hold, however, and in 2015 I proceeded to write a full biography of the first dean of the law school, W.P.M. Kennedy. In 2014, I had published an introduction to the republication of Kennedy's classic Oxford text, The Constitution of Canada. I wasn't sure whether I would go on to do a biography and so did not include those documents in my 2014 accession. They are included in this accession.

I had found that Kennedy was an important and fascinating character and there was, as it turns out, sufficient documentary evidence to do the biography, in spite of the fact that Kennedy had destroyed most of his papers. There were, however, a few trunks of documents that he had left at his cottage. By chance, my wife and I purchased the cottage from Kennedy's son in 1983. Although nothing was said about the trunks of letters, Kennedy's son, who was himself a U of T law graduate, would mention to me that I should write a biography of his father. I spent the next four years on the biography, which is scheduled to be published by the University of Toronto Press in May 2020. Because it is a search to understand who Kennedy was, the book is entitled Searching for W.P.M. Kennedy: The Biography of an Enigma.

The bulk of the material in this accession contains material relating to Kennedy and the writing of the biography.

This acquisition includes material generated since the last acquisition in 2020 (B2020 - 0008), plus some earlier document that had not yet been sent to the U of T Archives. Much of the material relates to my most recent project on ten criminal cases since confederation, tentatively entitled Canadian Criminal Law Since Confederation in Ten Not-So-Easy Cases. There is also additional material relating to my previous project on W.P.M. Kennedy: Searching for W.P.M. Kennedy: The Biography of an Enigma, published by the U of T Press in 2020. I have also included an unpublished novel that I wrote after completing my memoirs in 2007. Perhaps rightly, I never found an agent to represent me, let alone a publisher to want to publish it.

I continue to occupy an office at the law school, which, like most of the faculty during Covid, I did not use very often. In recent months, I have gone in more regularly, particularly to get this accession into respectable shape.

I doubt if there will be another large project, but one never knows. In September 2022, I celebrated my 90th birthday. The Law school held a special event on October 19, 2022, that was – from my perspective – a wonderful occasion. One of the boxes of material contains material on that event.

Research for the book on the ten criminal cases started in 2019 when I had more or less completed the Kennedy manuscript. In one of my periodic lunches with Christopher Moore at the old Intercontinental Hotel restaurant on Bloor Street, he said he was thinking of doing a book on major civil liberties cases. I said I should do one on the criminal law. Choosing and researching the cases turned out to be the perfect Pandemic Project. Much of the material needed was online.

The book tells the story of the development of the criminal law in Canada since Confederation by examining ten significant criminal cases. I have found – particularly through my three true-crime books – that by researching and telling stories, one can often gain a better understanding of the legal system than by a traditional legal analysis. I was fortunate to have obtained an SSHRC Insight Grant, which enabled me to hire several excellent law students over the course of the research as summer research assistants: Keith Garrett, William Hall, and Brody Zukerman Schure. I had stated in my SSHRC application that I am approaching the end of my career as a scholar, but that may be a benefit in that I can draw on many decades of experience and scholarship.

The cases were chosen to show changes in the criminal law over the years. Each chapter looks at a case – sometimes more than one case – and describes developments in the criminal law leading up to the case. I examine each case in the light of the personalities of the participants, the social and economic conditions of the time, and other factors not always discussed in the court's decision. Each chapter then goes on to trace future changes in the law. I have concentrated on Supreme Court of Canada cases. Most, but not all of the cases, are well-known to lawyers. I have tried to make the chapters useful for law students and accessible to non-lawyers.

The boxes for each chapter contain correspondence connected with the case being examined, drafts of the chapter and comments by expert readers. With one exception, I have not included most of my research notes and sources because they can be found in the endnotes. I have, however, included in the material a loose-leaf binder containing photocopies of all of the often hard-to-find references in the chapter on Louis Riel. These references are likely to be useful to future researchers on the case, which I note in the book is "arguably the most important criminal case in Canadian history."

Series 1: Personal and Family

Date range: 1907 – 2022 (1956-2022)

Extent: 0.91 +.07 m (9 boxes) of textual publications

Scope and content: This series documents some of Professor Friedland's personal and family activities, some partially covered in accession B2002-0023 and some not. Some of the material (birth certificate, old wills and passports, entries for Who's Who and like publications) provide an overview of Professor Friedland's activities at various times in his life. The files on his Toronto residences and his cottage (originally owned by W.P.M. Kennedy) document one aspect of the upward mobility of a prominent academic and writer. There is memorabilia in the form of selected greeting cards and files on trips taken over fifty years provide some insights on cultural and intellectual influences. Material on Arts and Law reunions and anniversaries at the University of Toronto, Cambridge University, and elsewhere provide additional comparisons of "then" and "now".

The correspondence with members of Professor Friedland's extended family focus on family affairs generally and on personal lives, including professional achievements and social activities, births, weddings and deaths. The most substantial files related to his children, Tom, Jennifer and Nancy, and his mother, Mina, who died in 2000. The large number of photographs provides visual documentation of the family spanning a century.

The files contain correspondence, addresses, certificates and programmes, greeting cards and other memorabilia, legal documents, a memoir, notes, flyers, passports. The records are grouped by activity and arranged, in the case of most of the correspondence, by the name of the family member to which it refers.

For a detailed listing of the contents of this series, see Series 1 in the Appendix.

Access: Restricted until 2029 or the death of the Donor, whichever is later.

Series 2: Honours

Date range: 1958 – 2022

Extent: 0.94 (4 boxes) of textual records

Scope and content: The files document honours bestowed on Professor Friedland between 1958 and 2014. They are certificates and awards related to the publication of his The University of Toronto: A History, his LL.B from University of Toronto (1958); his enrolment as a Solicitor of the Supreme Court of Canada (1960); his appointment as a full-time member of the Law Reform Commission of Canada (1971); his appointment as an Officer of the Order of Canada (1991) and his promotion to Companion of the Order of Canada (2003); the Molson Prize, awarded by the Canada Council (1995); the Dawson Medal, awarded by the Royal Society of Canada (2003), and four honorary doctorates from the University of Toronto (2001), York University (2003), Humber College (2009), and the Law Society of Upper Canada (2014).

Of these awards, only one (U of T) is documented elsewhere; in B2002-0023, where there is more documentation than in this series. There are photographs with no honorary doctorate from Cambridge University (1997).

Included in B2023-0027 accrual are two files relating to his 90th birthday celebration at the Faculty of Law.

The series contains correspondence, memoranda, minutes of meetings, programmes, certificates, convocation addresses and press coverage. The arrangement of the files is in chronological order of the honour bestowed.

Series 3: Correspondence

Date range: 1957 – 2020, predominant 1999 – 2022

Extent: 1.33 m 10.5 boxes) of textual records - + 0.2 m (2 boxes)

Scope and content: The correspondence files in this series are arranged alphabetically by author and concentrate on the years 2002 onwards. (Earlier correspondence from this series is found in accession B2002-0023.) The letters, notes, cards, programmes, drafts of articles, and press clippings document Professor Friedland's activities as a friend, as a colleague assisting in honours bestowed on his peers, as an author, and as an authority on legal matters. They also document the increased leisure that came with official retirement.

The wide range of material in the files includes correspondence, notes, grant applications, legal documents, press clippings; and drafts of articles, chapters of books, addresses (including convocation addresses), with a few offprints; and at least one play. There are also numerous greeting cards, including some with reproductions of paintings by Roy McMurtry.

The correspondence touches on many aspects of Professor Friedland's life, both personal and professional and reflects the enormous network of contacts in legal and academic circles that he had built up over the years. The files cover a wide range of issues that he has been researching, including gun control, justice independence, court mergers, and access to the law, and others that he had been discussing with his colleagues, such as international terrorism (for example, see the files on Stanley Cohen). In the same vein, Professor Friedland was periodically contacted for his views on court cases. Although officially retired, he continued to be consulted about University of Toronto policies and appointments, and still received requests for references from students and colleagues. Because he sat on the manuscript review committee of the University of Toronto Press, he continued to evaluate manuscripts and to critique manuscripts otherwise forwarded to him. He periodically hired law students as research assistants and assisted them (and other students) as they started their careers. In addition to correspondence on these activities, there are also letters of congratulation and of reference, and correspondence on trips taken. The files contain numerous invitations, with accompanying programs and related material, to dinners, installations and other events, and tributes to deceased friends and colleagues.

Series 4: Faculty of Law and other University of Toronto Activities

Extent: 0.26 m (2 boxes) of textual records

Scope and content: The correspondence files at the beginning of this series -- with three deans of Law in the 1980s and the 1990s and Professor Friedland's stint as acting dean in 1995 -- contain assorted letters not received earlier in B2003-0023. The remaining correspondence documents activities mostly from 2003 on, especially relating to the painting of his portrait, his contribution to the revitalizing the site of the Faculty's buildings and the construction of a new one, and his interest in student and faculty publications.

The most significant files in the remainder of the series document Professor Friedland's lecturing in the Faculty of Law and Woodsworth College from 2001 on, his involvement in an aspect of the Sher inquiry (the Nancy Oliveri case), and his advice in developing a student code of conduct at the University of Ontario Institute of Technology.

For a detailed listing of the contents of this series, see Series 4 in the Appendix.

Access: All records, except for B2008-0033/011(03), are restricted until 2029 or the death of the Donor, whichever is later. B2008-0033/011(03) is restricted until January 1, 2102.

Series 5: Research and Publications

Date range: ca. 1930s – 2023, predominant 1961 – 2023

Extent: 4.54 m (38 boxes) of textual records and publications
37 digital files (.htm, .jpeg, .gif)

Scope and content: The first section of this series documents some of Professor Friedland's activities regarding books and articles published before 2003, with updated files carried forward to 2013. While more extensive files pre-2003 writings are found in Series 5 of accession B2002-0023, the articles are found only in the accessions documented in this finding aid, B2003-0008 and B2014-0029.

The remainder of the series concentrates on several projects and their spin-off articles: Professor Friedland's Detention Before Trial (1965), a study of the bail system; A Place Apart: Judicial Independence and Accountability in Canada (1995); 'Access to the Law' project, a major internet attempt to make law more accessible; the first and second editions (2003 and 2013) of his University of Toronto: A History; several articles published in Criminal Law Quarterly including 'Criminal Justice in Canada Revisited' (2004), 'Searching for the Truth in the Criminal Justice System' (2014), 'Beyond a Reasonable Doubt: Does It Apply to Finding the Law' (2015), and 'Reflections on Criminal Justice Reform in Canada' (2017); his memoirs, My Life in Crime and Other Academic Adventures (2007); his introductions to University of Toronto: The Campus Guide: An Architectural Tour (2010) and the 2014 republication of W. P. M. Kennedy's The Constitution of Canada; and his Searching for W. P. M. Kennedy: the Biography of an Enigma (2020).

The 'Access to the Law' project, a follow-up on his 1975 book with the same title, did not go forward. The files document Professor Friedland's efforts to realize the project, including lining up support, looking for a field for ideas on implementation, and his failure to convince the Mike Harris government to support it financially. Also included is a digital copy of the internet project.

The files on The University of Toronto: A History, written for the University's 175th anniversary, complement those found in B2002-0022 relating to the first edition. They document not the writing of the book itself, but its launch and promotion, especially through Professor Friedland's talks to University alumni groups across Canada and in selected cities in the United States, at conferences, and also through an exhibition in the Thomas Fisher Rare Book Library. Also documented are individual readers' comments on the book, including references to errors and suggestions for inclusions in any future editions. The correspondence, notes, memoranda, programs, detail the issues that arose and how they were resolved. Some of Professor Friedland's talks relating to this project are found in Series 8: Addresses.

The second edition (2013) incorporated a new introduction and corrections. Notes for and drafts of it are present here, along with promotional material, reviews, and an interview with Steve Paikin of TV Ontario. The correspondence with individuals to whom Professor Friedland sent drafts for feedback includes incisive comments and new material provided by many of them. Professor Friedland detailed his conversations with, in particular, senior administrators: Donald Ainslie, Christina Amon, Meric Gertler, Paul Gooch, George Luste, Scott Maybury, Cheryl Misak, Mayo Moran, David Naylor, Julia O'Sullivan, Robert Prichard, Deep Siani, Shaun Shepherd, Elizabeth Sisam, Franco Vaccarino, Catherine Whiteside, and Paul Young. He also created additional files on many of the academic and administrative divisions in the University; these parallel those found in accession B1998-0022 relating to the writing of The University of Toronto: A History.

The research, writing, and publication of Professor Friedland's memoirs is documented in detail, including the hiring of research assistants and the reports they presented, the numerous drafts of the volume, and the negotiations with University of Toronto Press and the Osgoode Society for Canadian Legal History over its publication, distribution, and promotion. At the same time as he was starting work on his memoirs, Professor Friedland was asked to give the John Edwards Memorial Lecture for 2003, which was presented as 'Criminal justice in Canada revisited' and published under the same title. Most of the files relating to this project are in Series 8: Addresses, but those relating to its publication in the Criminal Law Quarterly are in this series. The publication was a somewhat revised version of a 15,000 word paper he prepared for the Lecture but not delivered.

The files on Professor Friedland's introduction to the 2014 republication of W. P. M. Kennedy's The Constitution of Canada by Oxford Press documents each stage of the project from its inception when Oxford Press reached out to Friedland to its publication and beyond including drafts, correspondence related to feedback before and after publication, and listings and reviews of the final product. After the publication of the introduction, Professor Friedland continued on to give several talks and write an extended biography on W. P. M. Kennedy.

The files related to Professor Friedland's biography, Searching for W.P.M. Kennedy: The Biography of an Enigma (2020) primarily document the research, writing, and publication of his book through research notes; correspondence with research assistants, archivists, colleagues, and the U of T Press, funding applications; and drafts.

In addition to a number of files on articles, derived from the above projects, are other files dealing with various aspects of criminal law in Canada.

Accession B2023-0027 saw the addition to this series of further documentation on the W.M. P Kennedy, and a few files relating to other publications. Most of the records in this series for this accession relate to newly published book Canadian Criminal Law Since Confederation in Ten Not-So-Easy Cases. Also included is a typescript of an unpublished novel completed by Friedland in 2013.

Series 6: Government Committees and Other Government Work

Date range: 2001 – 2022

Extent: 0.43 m (2.5 boxes) of textual records

Scope and content: The records in this series document Professor Friedland's participation in a number of workshops and conferences in the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto relating to terrorism, and a critical analysis he prepared on the federal government's proposed anti-terrorism legislation, Bill C-36, in the wake of 9/11. There are also files as a consultant on policy aspects of the mandate of the Arar Commission, the federal Judicial Compensation and Benefits Commission, the Ontario Legal Aid Advisory Committee, a review of the legal studies program at Capliano University, and several projects he did not undertake.

Related files in this accession are those in Series 5 on earlier book projects, Detention Before Trial and Double Jeopardy. Professor Friedland drew on his The Trials of Israel Lipski (1994) for an entry on Lipski for the Oxford Dictionary of National Biography.

The files contain correspondence, memoranda, minutes of meetings, notes, and drafts of and some final copies of reports.

Series 7: Other Professional Activities

Date range: 1984 – 2020, predominant 2001 – 2022

Extent: 1.55 m (8 boxes) of textual records

Scope and content: The files in this series document five principal activities and a few minor ones, the arrangement of which is alphabetical by name of organization. The first principal activity is the report Professor Friedland prepared for Access Copyright on the distribution of royalties. The files include background material, correspondence and drafts of the report.

In 2001 he accepted the position of a public director and chair of the Investment Protector Corporation of the Mutual Fund Dealers Association of Canada and two years later was appointed to its board. There he chaired its ad hoc committee on committee structures and its governance committee. The files contain correspondence, memoranda, drafts of legal documents, and proceedings of meetings.

Professor Friedland chaired several degree assessment committees for the Ontario government: one on a paralegal program for Humber College; and another on policing for Georgian College. He also continued as a member of the Osgoode Society for Canadian Legal History board of directors, which was a significant transitional period with the death of Peter Oliver and his replacement by Jim Phillips. The files contain correspondence, miscellaneous documents, and minutes of meetings. There are also files on various projects with the Law Society of Upper Canada. In 2008 he participated in an external review of the Faculty of Law at McGill University and commented on Judge Michael Code's mega-trial project. He also reviewed articles for Canadian legal journals.

Professor Friedland's heavy involvement with the University of Toronto Press, as chair of the manuscript review committee and as a member of the board of directors, ended in November 2007 and on June 30, 2008 respectively. These were important years for the U of T Press, with the appointment of a new president and vice-president for scholarly publishing, the sale of the printing division, and the acquisition of Broadview Press. The files, generally, contain correspondence, memoranda, notes, agendas for meetings, and several photographs. The manuscript review committee files contain extensive correspondence, especially with Suzanne Rancourt, senior editor, humanities, and Bill Harnum, senior vice-president, scholarly publishing; and with Heather Murray.

Series 8: Addresses

Date range: 1997 – 2008, 2022

Extent: 0.20 m (3 boxes) of textual records

Scope and content: Professor Friedland was asked by the Centre of Criminology and the Faculty of Law to give the John Edwards Memorial Lecture for 2003. This provided an opportunity to write an early draft of his memoirs, My Life in Crime and Other Academic Adventures, which he had been thinking about writing since finishing the University of Toronto history project. Over the summer he did a very long version of the lecture (the final count was over 37,000 words, with earlier drafts of around 25,000 words.) Then, for the lecture itself, he made a shorter version of about 15,000 words, followed by a much shorter version that could be delivered in 40 minutes or so. The article that appeared in the Criminal Law Quarterly was a somewhat revised version of the 15,000 word paper and was not the lecture as delivered.¹ These files contain correspondence, notes, and drafts of the lecture, which was somewhat altered for Professor Friedland's 2004 Life Learning lecture. The versions adapted for the Criminal Law Quarterly article appear in Series 5.

Some post-2003 addresses in B2014-0029 and B2020-0008 appear in Series 5 and 7, where they were placed by Professor Friedland.
