RATIONALE, ARRANGEMENT, AND FINDING AID FOR THE ARCHIVES OF THE
RESEARCH SOCIETY FOR VICTORIAN PERIODICALS
AND
VICTORIAN PERIODICALS REVIEW
(FORMERLY NEWSLETTER)

Since its founding in 1968 Victorian Periodicals Review has played a central role in the revival of interest in the Victorian period that has been growing steadily since the end of the second world war. In its pages have appeared articles dealing with an extraordinary variety of periodicals. Originally inspired by the late Professor Walter E. Houghton of Wellesley College, and his monumental reference work, The Wellesley Index to Victorian Periodicals, 1824-1900 (Toronto & London, 1966+), VPR itself spawned The Waterloo Directory of Victorian Periodicals, 1824-1900 (Waterloo, Ont., 1977) and the Research Society for Victorian Periodicals, a learned society existing to promote periodicals research and to oversee and publish research projects in the field.¹

Research upon periodicals of the nineteenth century has focused upon them either as subjects in themselves or as source material for other topics. It has, indeed, become something of a cliché to describe the nineteenth century as "the age of the periodical", when journals of every description were the usual vehicles for the transmission of news, entertainment, ideas, and opinion. For scholars in many disciplines familiarity with periodicals and periodicals research has become a necessary

1. See below, series 9, files 28-29 for research materials and MS. entitled "The Origins and History of VICTORIAN PERIODICALS REVIEW, 1954-1984" by N. Merrill Distad, a shorter version of which is to appear in Victorian Periodicals Review XVIII:3 (Fall, 1985).

prerequisite for nineteenth century studies, a kind of tool discipline akin to paleography, epigraphy, and numismatics.²

Now that it is nearing the end of its second decade it is appropriate that some effort be made to organise and preserve VPR's records and archives, along with those of RSVP, its sponsoring agency. The recent death of Walter Houghton (1904-83), doyen of Victorian periodicals scholars, has served to remind us that "our earthly span is but brief", and that efforts must be taken to secure records and archives as the building blocks of future research and histories.

Victorian Periodicals Newsletter³ was founded in 1968 at Indiana University by Professor Michael Wolff, co-founder and editor of the immensely successful journal Victorian Studies (1957+). At first issued irregularly, whenever sufficient copy came to hand, VPN soon led to the formation of the Research Society for Victorian Periodicals (RSVP) at a special session held under the auspices of the Modern Languages Association at its New York City meeting in December 1968. Only nine issues of VPN were produced at Bloomington, Indiana, however, before Wolff's departure for a new post at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, from which, with new colleagues to assist him, he issued a further eleven issues between 1970 and 1973.

In 1973 the journal moved to University College in the University of Toronto under the joint-editorship of Professors

2. See Rosemary Van Arsdel & J. Don Vann, eds., Victorian Periodicals: A Guide to Research (NY: MLA, 1978).

3. In 1979 the title was changed to REVIEW.

Peter F. Morgan and Hans B. deGroot. The current writer, who began as treasurer and business-manager in 1974, succeeded Morgan and deGroot in 1979 and 1981 respectively (see Appendix 1: Personnel, Toronto). An effort has been made to secure records and manuscripts still in the hands of former editors of the journal and officers of the society. Much has come to hand already in response to widespread pleas and requests, but more remains to be gathered in, and included in the archive. Nonetheless, the time has come for the entire collection of material to be placed on deposit in the University of Toronto Archives, which has undertaken to house it.

The editors of VPN-VPR and the executive officers of RSVP have over two decades generated a considerable bulk of records and manuscripts in their work on the journal and for the society. The similar nature of the work has meant that each incumbent has produced similar types of material, though the filing systems employed by various editors have differed. In deference to the archival principles of provenance and respect des fonds, an archival arrangement has been selected that preserves the chronological order in which the material was generated and the organic unity of function by treating the editorial archives more-or-less as collections of personal papers. An exception to this system of arrangement has been made for mere business records, which are of minimal research value, and are easily filed together in chronological or numerical sequence. These are therefore arranged collectively, without any personal headings.

Though it is not possible to itemize in the finding aid every correspondent to be found in the editorial papers, detailed lists of editorial personnel and society officers, along with their dates of tenure, have been supplied in appendices 1 and 2 to serve, in part, as an identification device for a large percentage of the writers and recipients, as well as for many of those named in the correspondence preserved in the editorial files. These personnel appendices are followed, finally, by the detailed finding aid to the series and files in the archive.
