PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

In 1989, the University of Toronto Archives published the second full inventory of a single fonds, The Inventory of the Records of the Office of the President. This research tool reflected a descriptive programme that resulted in other publications such as Inventory of the Records of Hart House (1988), Guide to Architectural Records, Guide to Moving Image Records (1991).

Fifteen years later we are now pleased to issue a second edition of The Inventory of the Records of the Office of the President. This edition adds more than 113 metres of records in 28 accessions. This edition reflects acquisitions from the Office of the President up to 1998, and other minor acquisitions not fully described when the first edition was issued. Thus the period now spans 1906 to 1993.

This second edition took two years to complete. Unlike the first edition, the work of describing additional accessions was undertaken as time permitted by existing staff. Lagring Ulanday, Records Archivist, undertook the bulk of the work, compiling file lists for many accessions, assigning records series numbers and revising descriptions. Garron Wells, University Archivist, supervised the project, created new series when necessary and edited the final manuscript.

While all attempts have been made to ensure the accuracy of the Inventory, we ask that users please bring to our attention any errors or omissions.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

The records of the Office of the President, acquired over the past twenty years by the University of Toronto Archives, are represented in this Inventory, the second inventory to be produced to date by the Archives. The first was an Inventory to the Records of Hart House published in 1987. This inventory, as well as future inventories, represents a description of series and sub-series of one fonds. An archival fonds is defined as the whole of the records, regardless of form or medium, naturally created and/or accumulated by an individual, institution, or organization in the course of the creator's activities or functions.

The annual deposit of records of the President represents one accession and contains within it several series, many of which continue over several years. The primary level of description of records for the inventory has been established at the series level. An archival record series is defined as the file units or documents arranged in accordance with a filing system or maintained as a unit because they relate to a particular subject or function, result from the same activity, have a particular form, or because of some other relationship arising out of their creation, receipt, or use. Every record series is, by definition, unique, and a unique registry number (RSIN) is applied by the archivist describing each identifiable record series within a fonds. This record series number will assist users who wish to consult the same series contained in several different accessions.

The extent of the records described in this Inventory totals 211 linear metres or 540 cubic feet covering the years from 1906 to 1984. The fonds level description appearing on page 14, showing open dates and no physical extent reflects the fact that the records of the Office of the President form an open fonds, with further accruals expected. As the organization of the office changes over time, some records series may be closed and new ones created. Researchers are advised to consult the Reference Archivist about subsequent accruals to the records series described in this Inventory.

This Inventory could not have been produced without the assistance of several individuals and institutions. I am grateful to Professor Terry Eastwood, Director of the Master of Archival Studies Programme at UBC, for proposing the University of Toronto Archives as a location for his students to undertake their practicum. We are pleased that Heather Heywood chose the University Archives as the site for her practicum. The staff of the University Archives benefitted from Heather's thorough analysis of the records of the Office of the President and her constructive suggestions for the format and presentation of the series descriptions for the Inventory. Her intelligent application of archival theory to the work of inventory construction will benefit archives' staff and users for many years to come.

The Canadian Council of Archives' Academic Internship Programme provided travel assistance for Heather and the Robarts Library supported the salary costs of this project for the sixteen weeks of the practicum. Rick Stapleton's supervision of this project and the helpful support of the Archives' staff during the course of the project, contributed to Heather's preparation of this Inventory. It is an essential guide for anyone wishing to consult records documenting decision-making by the principal executive officer of the University.

INTRODUCTION TO THE FIRST EDITION

The administrative records relating to the Office of the President of the University of Toronto held by the University Archives date from 1906. The fonds includes the administrative files of the President as well as the records of various vice-presidents, presidential committees, and presidential assistants.¹

Records from the main filing system in the office of the President are usually transferred yearly to the University Archives. Records from the vice-presidents are transferred periodically, while records accumulated by presidential assistants are not usually transferred until the position is terminated or a new person is appointed to the portfolio. Records of ad hoc presidential advisory committees are usually received in the Archives when the committee completes its study and makes its report to the President. Information about accession units (such as custodial history and date of transfer) is available in the Archives' case files.

The records of this fonds reflect both the growing complexity of administering the University and the increase in power and authority of the President's position in the University over the years since 1906. The records are useful for research into the President's interaction with faculty, senior administrators, and the general public, as well as the University's relations with its colleges, with various levels of government, and with assorted educational associations (provincial, national, and international).

The quality of documentation and physical arrangement of records varies from accession to accession. While most records remain in their original order, there are some notable exceptions. In particular, the original order of accessions A1967-0007 and A1968-0006 has been lost, and in some cases, records from one accession have been transferred to another for reasons that have not always been documented.

Most aspects of the President's activities are documented fairly consistently in the records, although the records relating to policy and procedure in the early years of President Cody's term of office are thin due to his style of administration. The records of the presidential assistants vary in depth and quality as some assistants were more thorough in their record keeping than others.

¹ As of 18 August 1989, the Inventory does not contain series descriptions for the records of the vice-presidents or the presidential committees.

Inventory of the Records of the Office of the President

Between 1906/07 and 1944/45, administration of the University was relatively simple, and is documented in four main series: RSIN 0002 (President's Correspondence Files); RSIN 0003 (President's Subject Files); RSIN 0004 (Estimates); and RSIN 0006 (Sessional Appointments). In 1945/46, a new filing system was established to include a variety of series. Although the system has expanded over the years, it has remained essentially unchanged and forms the backbone of the records from the Office of the President.

The series of this record system are:

- 0004 Estimates. -- 1910-1967.
- 0006 Sessional Appointments. -- 1906-1959.
- 0007 Senate. -- 1945/46-1971/72.
- 0008 Honorary Degrees. -- 1941-1980/81.

Records from the Board of Governors, Senate, and Governing Council may be useful for study in conjunction with the records of the office of the President. In addition, the personal papers of many of the presidents of the University of Toronto have been donated to the Archives and are available to researchers. The personal papers of James Loudon, covering the years 1885-1906, include many administrative records from his term as President. For more information about the University and its administration, please consult the Bibliography.

ADMINISTRATIVE HISTORY

The University of Toronto was established at York (now Toronto) by royal charter in 1827 as King's College. Classes were first taught at the College in 1843. In 1849, an Act to Amend the Charter secularized King's College and its name was changed to the University of Toronto. This 1849 amendment provided for a President of the University to be appointed by the Crown and to be subordinate to the Caput and Senate of the University.

The University Act of 1853 separated the examining and degree granting functions of the University from the teaching functions. Instruction of the arts was assigned to the new collegiate institution, University College, while professional courses were taught in the affiliated colleges. The President, to be appointed by the Governor of the province, became the President of the Council of University College but was not a member of the governing body of the University, known as the Corporation of the University of Toronto. It was not until 1873 that the University Act gave the President of University College a place in the Senate and thereby a small voice in the affairs of the University.

When the theological colleges in affiliation with the University of Toronto became federated colleges under the 1887 University Act, the University became a teaching body once again, and authority and responsibility for discipline over students as well as control of the officers and servants of the University was assigned to a new governing body, the University Council. The Act provided for a President of the University Council, who was also to be President of University College. This duality, where the administrative officers of University College were the officers of the University as well, continued until 1906. Moreover, under the 1887 Act, the Vice-Chancellor remained Chair of the Senate, so that the President was not the single head of academic matters.

In the amending Act of 1901 the president was officially recognized as the President of the University of Toronto and the duties of the position were outlined in some detail. However, the Act failed to give the position any real power.

The position of the President changed in 1906 when Section 80 (1) of the 1906 University Act declared the President of the University to be the chief executive officer thereof and assigned to the President the "general supervision over and direction of the academic work of the University, the teaching staff, and the officers and servants employed therein." Furthermore, the President was ex officio member of all faculty councils, Chair of the Council of the Faculty of Arts, and Chair of the Senate. The President was to be appointed by the Board of Governors and was to report annually to the Board and to the Senate "upon the progress and efficiency of the academic work of the University and University College." The President had the power to make recommendations to the Board as to all appointments to, promotions in, and removals from, the teaching staff of the University and to make recommendations regarding the requirements of the academic work of the University.

A 1946 Report on Administrative Organization at the University of Toronto described the President as both the chief academic officer and the titular head of the University. In these roles, the President had to know at all times what each faculty, college, school, and department was doing, and also had to represent the University to the public. A 1964 report on senior academic administration outlined six areas of academic responsibility for the President, including: (1) determination of curriculum and admissions policy; (2) appointments and promotions of academic personnel; (3) establishment of new academic departments or divisions, elimination or modification of existing departments, and determination of enrolment patterns; (4) determination of research policy; (5) discipline and welfare of students; and (6) information, publicity, and organization of alumni. The report also pointed out that the President served as the link between the Board of Governors and the academic community and was responsible for establishing priorities among the recommendations and proposals from the various academic committees and councils at the University.

The position of the President remained essentially unchanged until the 1971 University Act which abolished the bicameral system and established a Governing Council to direct both administrative and academic matters. Power to appoint the president shifted from the Board of Governors to the Governing Council, and the president must now be a Canadian citizen. In addition to general direction of the academic work of the University, the President has general supervision of the teaching and administrative staffs and makes all recommendations to the Council as to the appointments, promotions, suspensions, and removals from these staffs. The President is ex officio member of every council and reports annually to the Governing Council upon "the administration and the academic work of the University and University College and may make such recommendations with respect thereto as he considers advisable." The President also reports upon any matter referred to the Office by the Governing Council, or upon such other matters as the President may consider advisable. The President acts as the chief executive officer of the Council and the President's advice should "normally" be sought before a policy proposal reaches Council.

In practice, the President has often delegated some of the Office's functions to various vice-presidents, presidential committees, and presidential assistants. The 1902 University Act authorized the position of Vice-President, which was held by Professor Ramsay Wright until his retirement in 1912. With his retirement, the office of vice-president ceased to exist as it had never been of importance.² It was not until 1948, when President Sidney Smith appointed Claude Bissell as Assistant to the President, that the President again had an official assistant. In 1952, the Board of Governors established the office of Vice-President of the University and Bissell was appointed to that office. When Bissell resigned from the University in 1956, Dr. Murray G. Ross was appointed Executive Assistant to the President for a trial year, and was then elevated to Vice-President, a position he held until 1960.

In the 1960s, several changes were made in the Office of the President to reflect the complexity of administering an expanding university. President Bissell believed that the President of a university should be able to concentrate on specific fields that are crucial at a particular time and be relieved of most day-to-day responsibility for administration. To this end, Bissell created a number of vice-presidential portfolios designed to strengthen the central administration and to improve the lines of communication between central administrative officers and the heads of divisions as well as to enable the President to devote more time to long-range planning and to critical problems being raised on the provincial and national fronts. The appointment of various presidential assistants also helped to relieve the President of day-to-day responsibilities--a practice that continues into the present.

In 1965, the Board of Governors approved President Bissell's recommendation to establish a President's Council that would "consider all matters of priority in the development of the University and of its various parts and divisions, and to advise the President in connection therewith."³ The 1960s also saw a proliferation of presidential advisory committees (PACs) which were established by the President to examine specific problems and to make recommendations to him. Most of these committees were ad hoc, but some, like the Presidential Advisory Committee on Policy and Planning, were standing committees that advised the President on a variety of important matters, often with far-reaching consequences.

In 1972, John Robert Evans began a term as President of the University in which his major challenge was to oversee the implementation of the new unicameral system of government. He changed the administrative structure of the University, relating it to the committees of the Governing Council so that the five standing committees of the Council were each serviced by a vice-president. Under President Evans, vice-presidents were appointed for three- to five-year terms, but retained certain academic duties so that they could return to teaching when their appointments ended. Each vice-president has a certain amount of freedom to organize his/her office, and this fact, combined with the limited terms of office, has led to a fair degree of change among the administrative officers of the University. In addition, vice-presidential portfolios are created, discontinued, or revised as the needs and priorities of the University and its President change.

The wide variety of demands placed on the President of the University of Toronto are best summed up in former Registrar Robin Ross' description of the qualities that the University looks for in choosing a President: educational leadership, the ability to relate the university effectively to the public and the governments, an advanced degree of political sensitivity and acumen, and personal integrity.⁴

RSIN 0012 Centres.

1963/64-1992/93. -- 2.65 m. -- Centres are usually established within the School of Graduate Studies and differ from the departments in that they are involved in the creation and development of graduate (and sometimes undergraduate) interdisciplinary programs of teaching and research, and the fostering of new disciplines where these cannot proceed easily within the existing University structure. Some centres offer degree programs while others offer teaching through seminars or through the sponsorship of collaborative programs. -- Newsletters, bulletins, and annual reports; minutes and highlights of meetings; correspondence; invitations; material relating to arrangements for visiting professorships. For the academic year 1974/75, material is also included for several joint University of Toronto/York University Centres. Prior to 1963/64, information about centres and institutes was filed alphabetically in the series "Other Faculties" (see RSIN 0011). -- Arranged by academic year and within each year alphabetically by centre name.

RSIN 0033 Files of the Research Assistant to the President.

1947- 1979. -- 14.01 m. -- The position of Research Assistant appears to have been created in 1962 when Mrs. Frances Ireland was appointed to it by President Claude Bissell. She served in this position until her retirement in July 1979. During that time, she was responsible for assembling factual data, drafting correspondence requiring detailed research and analysis, writing reports, and editing the President's Report. Her area of work included secretary of the President's Council, the Presidential Advisory Committee on the Budget, the Resource Planning Committee, Simcoe Circle, and other senior administrative committees and task force groups. Mrs. Ireland was also involved in some extra-University responsibilities as secretary of various committees or sub-committees of the Committee of Presidents of Universities of Ontario/Council of Ontario Universities. From time to time, she was assigned various policies or issues to investigate for the University, such as calculating the cost per student of various programmes. Mrs. Ireland was replaced by Dr. Kenneth Bartlett in 1979.

The records in this series include minutes, briefs, reports, studies, and critiques originating with or submitted to the following organizations during the period 1955 to 1979: committees at the University of Toronto; the Committee of Presidents of Universities of Ontario/Council of Ontario Universities; the (Ontario) Council on Academic Affairs; the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada; the Advisory Committee on Academic Programmes; the Ontario Council on Graduate Studies; and the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario. The documents, assembled (and, in many cases, annotated and indexed) by Frances Ireland, served as reference material in such areas of presidential interest as trends and directions in postsecondary education, planning and budgeting, finances, staff, enrolment, curriculum and academic programmes, student aid, support services, physical facilities, and admission standards, as these matters affected the University of Toronto, other Ontario Universities, and universities in general. -- Material is generally arranged in sub-series. The condition of the records varies from accession to accession.

Academic Subcommittee of the Committee of Presidents of Provincially Assisted Universities and Colleges of Ontario.

-- 1961-1963. -- 26 cm. -- The Academic Subcommittee was established by the Committee of Presidents of Provincially Assisted Universities and Colleges on 21 March 1962 to draft a report on higher education in Ontario. The subcommittee presented its draft to the Committee of Presidents in May 1962, and this draft formed the basis of a document that was sent on to the provincial government, entitled "Postsecondary Education in Ontario, 1962-1970: Report of the Presidents of the Universities of Ontario to the Advisory Committee on University Affairs." On 5 February 1963, the Committee of Presidents requested the committee to re-convene in order to prepare two supplementary reports. Mrs. Frances Ireland served as the secretary to the subcommittee in both periods. -- Correspondence; copies of minutes; copies of the subcommittee's main report and supplementary reports; copies of the document submitted to the provincial government, entitled "Post-Secondary Education in Ontario, 1962-1970"; background material, including enrolment statistics and budget information. -- Arranged chronologically.

Subcommittee on Research and Planning.

1963-1972. -- 2.35 m. -- The Presidents' Research Committee was established in 1962 as a part of the Committee of Presidents of Provincially Assisted Universities and Colleges of Ontario. Its name was changed to the Subcommittee on Research and Planning when the Committee of Presidents became the Committee of Presidents of Universities of Ontario in December 1966. The mandate of this group was to suggest to the Committee of Presidents research and planning projects which should be undertaken for the development and improvement of higher education in Ontario and to play such other relevant advisory roles as may be assigned by the Committee of Presidents. Frances Ireland was secretary of the Research Committee from its inception in 1962 until 1972.

Records include originals and copies of minutes; correspondence; memoranda; press clippings; reports and submissions on various issues; responses to reports and proposals; statistics; background materials; and notes (both longhand and shorthand) made by Frances Ireland. Issues which are documented include, among others: university enrolment, denominational colleges, admissions, postsecondary education, student awards, student participation in university government, student discipline, operating grants, libraries and librarians, graduate studies, and residences. -- Although the condition of the records varies from accession to accession, material is usually arranged chronologically. Files in accession A1974-0019 are arranged by academic year and within each year according to a numeric filing system established by Frances Ireland.

RSIN 0065 Files of the Executive Assistant to the President.

1956-1967 -- 4.27 m. -- In June 1956, the Board of Governors approved the appointment of Murray G. Ross as Executive Assistant to the President for the academic year 1956/57. A year later, his appointment was reviewed and the position was changed to Vice-President. When Ross resigned as Vice-President in 1960, the position of Executive Assistant to the President was reinstated and the Board of Governors approved the appointment of John H. Sword to the portfolio, effective 1 July 1960. President Bissell outlined his concept of the office in a letter to Sword in December 1959. The Executive Assistant was to be a senior staff officer of the University whose major role would be to maintain close liaison with "those divisions of the University that the President cannot effectively deal with by direct contact." He would have a similar role on all committees concerned with general University policy (particularly those committees that had as their primary function the giving of advice to the President) and would have responsibilities as the President's representative at ceremonial and social events. Bissell emphasized that he had no intention of changing the position into a vice-presidential portfolio. In 1965, Sword was appointed Vice-Provost, and Donald F. Forster was appointed to the position of Executive Assistant, effective 1 July 1965. In his announcement of the appointment, President Bissell noted that Forster would work closely with the President and the Provost on matters of general policy and would be responsible for making arrangements for visitors, writing ceremonial greetings, and maintaining liaison with staff and other administrative officers. In 1967, Forster was appointed Vice-Provost and Executive Assistant to the President (see RSIN 0064), and the position of Executive Assistant to the President ceased to exist.
